The house's occupant, Brian R. Balow, 20, was booked into Marin County Jail on suspicion of cultivation of marijuana and held on $1,000 bail, to appear in Marin Municipal Court Monday. Police made the raid after one of Balow's neighbors spotted the plants. (I-J photos)

Legislature Ends A Record Session

Welfare Package Defeated

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—The Legislature adjourned its longest session in history last night after killing a Reagan-backed welfare plan and voting more freeway construction money for Southern California.

The lawmackers left Sacramento without achieving what most had regarded as their No. 1 goal: Tax reform. Gov. Ronald Reagan's $1 billion tax revision program was killed by the Senate the night before adjournment.

The 1970 session ended with a flurry of confetti, firecrackers and good cheer at 10:30 p.m. after 229 days in continuous session—a record.

The Legislature will return briefly for five days on Sept. 21 to consider whether to override Reagan vetoes. Unless the governor calls them into special session—perhaps for tax or welfare reform—the lawmakers won't meet again until January.

IGNORE CONTENTIONS

The Senate ignored contentions that rejection of the welfare revision could cost the state $110 million and the counties $55 million in federal funds and killed it just before adjournment.

The measure needed 27 votes for passage and received only 17. Twelve voted against it. A few minutes earlier, it had passed the Assembly overwhelmingly, 73-2.

The program, negotiated in an interhouse conference committee, was designed to bring California welfare regulations into line with the Nixon Administration's. The Reagan Administration has been threatened with a cutoff of federal funds unless it falls into line with the federal government.

A COALITION

But a liberal-conservative coalition of opponents argued President Nixon would not "embarrass" Reagan during an election year by chopping off such a huge amount of federal money. They also said the issue could be reconsidered during the brief veto override session.

The bill, authored by Assemblyman Gordon Duffy, R-Hanford, would have increased Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) by 15 per cent starting next July, unless the federal government mandated the hike earlier. It also would have provided the aged, blind and disabled with a guaranteed $4 monthly increase.

"It helped poor people and it helped the taxpayers," Duffy said afterward, somewhat bitterly. "But perhaps the Senate has more important problems than to help the taxpayers and the poor."

SESSION OUT

Asked if he would request a special session on the issue, Duffy, chairman of the Assembly Health and Welfare Committee, replied:

"No sir. I did my thing."

Southern California legislators, meanwhile, won a fight they had been waging for decades when the Senate sent Reagan a bill increasing

OFFICIAL TALKS

Cancellation Of '71 Fair Looms

For the first time publicly, a Marin County official has said the County's Art and Garden Fair may have to be cancelled next year due to a lack of an adequate site.

Marin's fair had annually been held at the Art and Garden Center in Ross, but the county's contract with the center terminated this year and officials said it is highly unlikely the contract will be renewed. The Town of Ross has been unhappy with the large crowds which the fair lures into the small community.

Fair officials have been hopeful of moving the annual event to the county's new autitorium at the Civic Center, but a letter from Asst. County Administrator Thomas F. Campanella to the count board of supervisors says such a move next year would present problems.

Campanella's letter — to be heard by the supervisors Tuesday — suggests the fair may have to be cancelled because of the high cost of getting the grounds around the auditorium ready to accommodate large crowds.

Campanella said the fair could be held in the auditorium but indicated the fair would have to be held in September or October because the building won't be finished until at least that time. The Art and Garden Fair is usually held in early July.

He also said the size of the auditorium would severely limit the number of persons who could get in to see the fair.

As another option, Campanella said the fair could utilize both the auditorium and adjacent grounds and the lagoon, but indicated it would take about $100,000 to do the necessary landscaping.

He also said the county might ask the state's permission to move the fair to another location in the county.

U.S. Viet Foot War Slowest This Year

SAIGON (UPI)—Ground action involving U.S. forces in South Vietnam reached its lowest level this year with no major contact report for the past four days, military sources said today.

However, the sources warned the Communist forces could be assembling for attacks within 10 days to mark two major North Vietnamese holidays — independence day Sept. 2 and the first anniversary of Ho Chi Minh's death Sept. 3.

There also was no major fighting reported in Cambodia, with Cambodian forces carrying out operations seven miles north of Phnom Penh today to clear out the last of three defeated and disorganized Communist battalions that tried to crack the capital's defenses.

The U.S. Command in Saigon reported two Americans killed Friday—one a crewman aboard an Army helicopter when it was shot down east of Saigon and one in brief exchange of fire in northern Quang Tri province. Six Americans were wounded in the same area when their vehicle hit a mine.

Records showed that American casualties in Vietnam now are at about the same level as late 1965 when the massive U.S. buildup began.

South Vietnamese military spokesman announced the competition of a government operation near Highway 1 about nine miles inside Cambodia. Government Rangers reported killing 47 Communist troops in the 10-day drive near Kompong Trach and said 15 South Vietnamese soldiers were killed and 78 wounded.

A Cambodian military spokesman said three Cambodian battalions were combing marshes in the area of Prek Tameak, a village nine miles north of the capital. The village fell to the Communists during fighting that began Wednesday and the announcement was not clear whether it had been retaken by the Cambodians.

Flares lit the sky north of Phnom Penh Friday night but the spokesman said they were set off "only to warn the civilian population." He did not elaborate.

Today's cleaning up operations were the closing chapters of a Communist assault directed against Cambodian defenders guarding the northern approaches to Phnom Penh. The probes apparently were aimed at testing the capital's defenses, although the broad Mekong River lies between the Communists and Phnom Penh and would make a direct attack on the city itself nearly impossible.

A Cambodian battalion, backed up against the river, held off at least six assaults and killed 500 Communist soldiers, field commanders reported. Two battalions of reinforcements moved in to help the battle-weary soldiers Friday.

The Cambodians said they suffered 19 dead and 124 wounded.

In other action in Cambodia a Communist force of unknown size harassed Cambodian defense positions in the provincial

Sihanouk Will Free Journalists

BELGRADE (UPI) — The Cambodian government in exile of Prince Norodom Sihanouk has announced it will release four journalists captured by Communist forces fighting there, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug said today in a dispatch from Peking.

The dispatch did not identify those to be released by name but said two were French, another Dutch and a fourth American.

Tanjug said Sihanouk's coordination minister, Thioun Prasith, told a news conference the four journalists will be released "in the course of the coming week." Sihanouk set up his government in exile in the capital of Communist China after he was ousted as Cambodian chief of state last March.

Prasith said the government in exile was attempting to

Blaze Hits Filipino Vessel; 42 Aboard

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) -An air and sea rescue flotilla Saturday reached the Philippine cargo ship Don Jose Figueras, on fire and in "critical" danger of sinking in the Pacific with 42 persons aboard.

"The situation is getting worse" since the Figueras radioed its first S.O.S. Friday night, the Coast Guard said.

"The captain has reported the firefighting situation has grown worse and he has fires in three holds. The pumps are no longer working," the Coast Guard reported.

"He has evaluated the situation as critical."

The vessel was reported cracking along the portside and listing 23 degrees to starboard.

Two Japanese ships, the Ogishima Maru and the Cuba Maru, responded to the 466-foot Figueras' S.O.S. and stood by ready to launch lifeboats.

Two U. S. Air Force planes hovered over the Figueras, located 985 miles northwest of San Francisco. They dropped inflatable life rafts and a radio.

An Air Force C130 from Hamilton Air Force Base, radied that the Figueras appeared to be "sinking fast," but Coast Guard officials said it might be hours before the ship's fate would be decided. The weather was good with seas running moderate and south winds of 17 knots.

The Figueras was carrying a cargo of toys and other items for Sears Roebuck over the Great Circle route. It also had two passengers.

It's agent, Transmarine Navigation Corp., said it has received a message from the ship saying it was "in very critical situation."

When the Figueras sent its S.O.S. Friday saying its 42-man crew was unable to control the flames, the U. S. Coast Guard cutter Yacona was dispatched from the nearest port, Astoria, Ore. The Yacona was about 500 miles away and was not due on the scene until Monday morning.

U.S. Plans To Keep Suez Canal Flights

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The United States plans to continue high altitude reconnaissance flights over the Suez Canal cease-fire zone despite Egyptian objections.

State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said in Washington Friday the flights would continue. The semiofficial Cairo newspaper Al Ahram said Egypt had notified the United States it objected to the use of U2 reconnaissance planes and orbiting satellites to monitor the Suez cease-fire line.

McCloskey also expressed optimism U.N. negotiator Gunnar V. Jarring soon would obtain agreement by Israel, Egypt and Jordan on a time and place for the Middle East peace talks to begin. The cease-fire that hopefully will lead to such talks now is in its 15th day.

United Nations diplomats said the talks are expected to begin in New York next week under the auspices of Jarring, possibly with ambassador to the United Nations Joseph Tekoah representing Israel.

In Alexandria, Egyptian president Gamal Abdel Nasser and Jordan's King Hussein continued their talks today to work out a united front when the discussions get under way.

An official communique on the meetings, which began Thursday, said at their Friday meeting Hussein and Nasser discussed "the Arab situation in all its international, military and political aspects, as well as everything that is connected with the confrontation with the enemy."

The presence in Hussein's delegation of Suleiman El-Nabulsi, a Jordanian ex-premier of Palestinian origin, indicated the talks also might cover the long-range future of the Palestinians.

In Beirut, Palestinian sources said three vehicle-loads of Israeli troops crossed the border into Lebanon early Friday and blew up three vacant houses in the village of Al-Zahira. The action apparently was in reprisal for raids by guerrillas based in Lebanon. The guerrillas have not accepted the cease-fire.

Israel Friday night lodged their fourth complaint with the United Nations claiming "grave" violations of the cease-fire by the Egyptians.

A spokesman said the complaint referred to information in the hands of the Israeli defense forces which showed construction work on missile

Nixon Gives Agnew Asian Sendoff

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — President Nixon gave Vice President Agnew a personal sendoff today on his far east swing to reassure Asian allies of America's continuing commitment in that area.

The vice president took off before noon after conferring with Secretary of State William P. Rogers and National Security Affairs Adviser Henry A. Kissinger.

The vice president will be gone 12 days on his second Asian tour, with stops in South Korea, Taiwan, Thailand and South Vietnam to meet with government leaders. It also was hinted the vice president might visit Cambodia.

Agnew leaves at a time when some of the leaders of Southeast Asia are concerned with the Nixon policy of lowering the U.S. profile and presence in their part of the world.

Nixon was in an exuberant mood on his arrival at his blufftop villa here Friday following a brief but colorful state visit to Puerto Vallarto, Mexico, to meet with Mexian President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz.

Their talks ended with an historic agreement solving the long standing border disputes between the two nations and setting guidelines for settling future problems caused by the shifting Rio Grande, which separates Texas from Mexico.

Winding up his 28-hour stay in Puerto Vallarta, Nixon, in a flowery toast, announced he would hold a state dinner in honor of Diaz at the elegant Hotel Del Coronado near San Diego, Calif., on Sept. 3.

He also described the dinner, with 800 guests invited, as the windup event in California's 200th anniversary celebration.

The president has a heavy official schedule for his two week stay at the Western White House. Rogers and Attorney General John N. Mitchell will be on hand for the duration for high-level meetings.

The president also planned to summon other cabinet members and military advisers to meetings of the domestic council and the National Security Council later in the week.

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon is far along in formulating next year's federal budget.

Ziegler did not comment on a report that the 1972 budget may show a $10 billion to $15 billion deficit. He noted Congress has not acted on a number of current appropriations bills.

The President was greeted by a crowd of several hundred well-wishers when he came home from his trip to Mexico. Smiling and pleased with the turnout, he spent about 15 minutes walking along the fence and shaking hands.

His daughter and son-in-law, Julie and David Eisenhower, were waiting at the villa to greet the Nixons when they arrived. The Nixon's eldest daughter, Tricia, is expected to join the family next week.

Linda Kasabian To Write 'Family' Book

MILFORD, N. H. (UPI)—Linda Kasabian, the star prosecution witness in the Tate-LaBianca murder trial in Los Angeles, plans to write a book about her experiences with the Manson family, the Boston Globe said today in a copyrighted story.

The tiny mother of two said she has agreed to collaborate with an unidentified West Coast author in the venture, it was reported.

WIRE NEWS BRIEFS From Everywhere

Tax Extensions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate voted 69 to 0 Friday to require the military to extend tours of duty outside combat zones "for longer periods of time." The move was opposed by the Pentagon.

25 Bus Deaths

SEOUL (UPI) — The death toll in a Friday night bus crash on the new Pusan-Seoul highway has risen to 25 and may increase, police said today. Ten passengers were killed outright when the bus rolled off the highway into a valley and 15 have died since. Another 22 passengers are hospitalized in critical condition.

Sellers To Wed

LONDON (UPI) — British actor Peter Sellers Monday will marry Miranda Quarry, 23, the stepdaughter of Lord Mancroft.

Friday Sellers, according to his agent, said that "after spending two years of getting to know each other pretty well, we decided not to wait any longer. We are both very happy."

Reagan Vacation

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Gov. Ronald Reagan begins a week's vacation Monday at his Pacific Palisades home, press aides announced Friday.

Reagan was confined to his office the past week because it was the wrapup of the 1970 legislative session.

To Brief Press

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — Some 50 newspaper and broadcast editors from 13 Western states will get a briefing on foreign affairs at the Western White House Monday.

An administration spokesman said Friday the briefing will be conducted by Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, Nixon's national security affairs adviser, and Joseph Sisco, undersecretary of state for the Middle East, following opening remarks by the President.

Black Day

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — The legislature passed and forwarded to Gov. Ronald Reagan Friday a bill by assemblyman Willie Brown Jr., D-San Francisco, designating March 5 as Black American Day in California.

Final approval occurred when the Assembly agreed, at Brown's "reluctant" urging, to accept Senate amendments which rewrote the bill.

The bill originally set Jan. 15, the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr., for the observance. But the Senate Finance Committee struck that provision and substitute March 5, the date of the death of Crispus Attucks, the first black man to die in the American Revolutionary War.

Some of the legislators said they felt King was too "controversial" a figure.

CAP Executive

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Gen. John Paul McConnel, former Air Force chief of staff, was named executive consultant to the Civil Air Patrol today, an official auxiliary of the air force.

Suspected Slayer's Sketch Is Released

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI)— An artist's composite sketch of the suspected slayer of Patrolman Ronald Tsukamoto has been released by police. The 28-year-old rookie was the third Bay Area officer slain in the past two months.

Sgt. Richard Burger said Friday a witness to the shooting, which authorities termed "a political assassination," told police the sketch was "somewhat similar" to the killer.

The suspect was described as Negro, 5 feet 11, 170 pounds. He has a two-inch Afro hairdo and is about 22 years old.

Tsukamoto was killed Thursday as he stood on a Berkeley street corner talking to a motorcyclist he stopped for making an illegal U-turn. Police have declined to identify the motorcyclist as a safety precaution.

According to the witness, the suspect walked up to them, joined briefly in conversation, pulled out a pistol and shot Tsukamoto in the head.

Others who saw the shooting said the gunman escaped in a nearby car in which one and possibly two persons were waiting. The car was believed to be a light-colored 1959 Studebaker.

Berkeley Police Chief Bruce Baker's charge that the killing was political draw a retort Friday from the National Committee to Combat Fascism, a group of white sympathizers of black militants.

The Berkeley Police Department and other police departments in the nation, the committee said, are "reaping the harvest of years of oppressive brutality and murder in ghetto communities."

University of California Police, meanwhile, reported that two Molotov cocktails were thrown at their patrol cars Trursday night. Neither caused damage to the vehicles but one started a shrubbery fire.

San Francisco Police chief Al Nelder discontinued one-man cars the day after the fatal shooting of Patrolman Richard Radetich in July. San Jose Chief Ray Blackmore announced after Tsukamoto's death that two-man cars will be on the streets during the critical hours of the night.

Earlier this month, San Jose patrolman Richard Huerta was shot to death as he wrote out a traffic ticket.

Apperson Ridge Basalt Mining Plan Is Halted

LIVERMORE (UPI) — Utah Construction and Mining Co. has abandoned its controversial plan to quarry basalt from scenic Apperson Ridge near Sunol Valley Regional Park.

The company and the ridge's owner, William W. Apperson announced Friday that Utah's lease had been terminated. However, Apperson's attorney said the owner was studying several other proposals concerning the basalt deposit.

Utah's plan to remove 10 million cubic yards from the ridge over a 30-year period was rejected by the Alameda County Board of Supervisors last October after protests from conservationists.

The fatality rate on the nation's interstate highway system is 2.9 per 100 million miles of travel, against 5.7 for conventional roads.

Kesey Clears His Last Legal Hurdle

REDWOOD CITY (UPI)— Novelist Ken Kesey, 34, now is off marijuana and out of trouble with the law.

The author of "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest" and "Sometimes A Great Notion" cleared his last legal hurdle Friday.

Judge Allison Rouse held that "because of the publicity given this case in the past, I want to show that this action is not discretionary, but mandatory procedure when the term of probation has been satisfied."

Kesey, former college wrestler and hero of the nation's hippie set, served six months in the San Mateo County jail and was on probation for three years. One of the terms of his probation was to abstain from use of marijuana.

County probation officer Ray Faber told the judge Kesey had complied with all terms of his probation. Kesey, who lives in Oregon, was not in court.

There are $222 in paper currency and $29 in coins in circulation for each person in the United States, says the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago.

State Ready To Place Manson At Tate Mansion Prior To Killings

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The prosecution at the Tate murder trial has two witnesses ready to testify that Charles Manson was at Sharon Tate's home and possibly met Miss Tate shortly before the mass murders a year ago this August.

The disclosure that the hippie cult leader was seen at the estate was made by a court source Friday and contradicts the defense line that Manson never had an opportunity to see, let alone meet, the blonde actress.

The trial, in recess over the weekend, was featured Friday by the testimony of Los Angeles County Coroner Thomas T. Noguchi who said that Miss Tate was stabbed 16 times and had throat burns "consistent with being hanged."

Before Noguchi took the stand, a court source confirmed during the morning session that Rudy Altabelli, owner of the $225,000 estate which Miss Tate and her husband, Roman Polanski, leased, and Miss Tate's personal photographer, S. Hatami, will testify they saw Manson in the home and on the grounds a few weeks before the killings.

It was not known whether the witnesses will testify that they actually saw Miss Tate and Manson together, but the opportunity existed.

The defense has consistently denied that the 35-year-old cult leader was ever at the home in the summer of 1939 and said he had never met the beautiful blonde actress.

"The cause of death was multiple stab wounds of the chest and back, penetrating the hearts, the lungs and the liver, causing a massive hemorrhage," Noguchi said.

At Least 39 Dead From Tropical Storm Dorothy

SAN JUAN, P. R. (UPI)— The death toll from tropical storm Dorothy on the islands of Martinique and Dominica climbed to at least 39 today while the storm continued its march across the Caribbean, threatening Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

At least four other persons were reported missing on Martinique and sketchy reports filtering from the storm-battered island indicated at least 200 others were injured.

All but one of the deaths occurred on Martinique when the storm hit Thursday. The one man who died on Dominica lost his life when a bridge he was crossing was washed out by a flash flood.

Army engineers on French Martinique were busy today trying to restore roads, power and telephone lines knocked out by the torrential rains and high winds.

Drinking water was rationed and the island was left without air service. Officials said flights probably would not be resumed before Sunday night.

Guadeloupe, another French island north of Martinique, reported no casualties from the storm, but officials said much of the island's vital banana crop had been destroyed.

At 6 a.m. EDT the storm was centered near latitude 15.7 north, longitude 69.0 west, or about 270 miles southwest of San Juan.

BUT U.S. VIOLENT

Visiting Italian Students Find Marin One Of The Best Places

By C.P. McCARTHY

Whether America is an inherently violent nation may be a debatable point, but to a group of Italian students now spending a couple of weeks in Marin, there is no doubt about it.

The 10 students have been in the U.S. since July 13, and in Marin since Aug. 1, on a visit arranged by an organization called Experiment in International Living, with headquarters in Putney, Vt.

After arriving in the U.S. and undergoing two days of orientation at Putney, the group headed west with overnight stops in Chicago and Salt Lake City.

Two weeks were spent at the University of Nevada in Reno before the group came to Marin. Each is housed with a Marin family.

The impression of violence is understandable. During the students' one-night stay in Chicago, an 18-year-old Stockton girl, attending a convention, was found dead — her throat slashed — in a hotel room two floors above those of the Italian students.

While in Reno, the body of a 7-year-old girl was found murdered in a cellar.

And less than a week after their arrival in Marin, Judge Harold J. Haley of Marin Superior Court and three others died in a bloody shoot-out at the Civic Center.

"Everywhere we go, someone's dead," was Fausto Pelizzari's impression.

Pelizzari, 22, was among the students who talked with the Independent-Journal this week.

The strangest thing seen in their American travels, they agreed, was an Indian dressed in western clothes in Salt Lake City.

"It's sad," his companion, Massimiliano Sironi, 22, commented. "The cowboy killed so many Indians and now the Indian wears the clothes of the killer."

The students agreed the major misconception they had of America before coming was its affluence.

"People in Europe imagine the United States as a place where everything is permitted everyone, where everyone can afford to buy anything," Sironi said, "but when you come, it's not so.

"You can see two sides: where the rich live and where the poor live. It's the same as in Europe," he said, adding, however, that "people in Europe would never imagine anything so sad as Harlem."

The students reflected favorably to other conditions, however. For instance, Pelizzari said, "I didn't expect to find such great kindness in American people."

He said he had wrongly envisioned Americans only as dedicated workers and with somewhat mechanical personalities.

"I didn't expect Americans would be so human," he said.

And through a system of logic, they observed that Marin County is one of the best places in the world.

Pelizzari explained it like this: "Marin County is one of the best places around San Francisco; San Francisco is one of the best places in California; California is one of the best places in the United States, and the United States is one of the best places in the world."

"But I don't believe all America is like Marin," he added, quickly.

During their Marin stay, which will end Tuesday, Pelizzari is staying with Mr. and Mrs. Bruno Michetti of 27 Briarwood Drive, San Rafael, and Sironi is staying with Dr. and Mrs. Philip Hicks of Woodhaven Road, Ross.

State Legislators Will Convene In Salt Lake City

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI)— State Legislators from all the states will open their 23rd Annual National Legislative Conference in Salt Lake City Monday.

Sen. W. Hughes Brockbank, R-Salt Lake City, president of the conference, said Friday, "This is the first time this meeting of the leaders from the various states have met in Utah."

"This conference will address itself to problems that face the states," the Utah state senator added. "When the delegates return home they will implement programs to help in solving their local problems."

The major issue in this years conference will be the balance of power between the state and federal governments, according to Brockbank.

"In the past the federal government has set the guidelines for the state governments," he noted. "We need to get the state legislatures to start a frontend input to stimulate federal legislation."

He said the states have lost considerable power to the "bureaucratic beast" in Washington, and the state governments need to regain this power.

Brockbank added that the states were attempting to regain some of this lost ground through "income tax sharing and promoting federal legislation on welfare."

Conference officials expect about 1,750 guests during the weeklong meeting. About 1,000 of these will be delegates, and the others will be wives and children.

Brockbank said the conference is made up of elected representatives and their staffs. The conference will have two concurrent sessions—one for the estimated 600 elected legislators and one for the approximately 400 staff members.

Five Men From Marin Inducted Into Service

Five men were inducted into the armed forces in August by the Marin Selective Service Board, executive secretary Joy M. Kinzer reported yesterday.

Twenty-four men had been ordered to report for induction.

Mrs. Kinzer said eight failed to report; two refused induction; one had his induction transferred to another board; four failed to meet physical standards; one enlisted prior to induction and three are pending induction.

Tha names of those who failed to report and refused induction were withheld pending possible court action.

The five inducted were Richard R. Dougan of Nicasio, Glenn S. Hunter of Kentfield, Steven L. Waite of Novato, Jeffrey G. Ferris of Tiburon and Ray J. Young of Ventura.

Young was inducted through the Marin board because he registered in Marin County on his 18th birthday.

The September draft will be held to men with lottery numbers through 195 — the second month in a row the draft has been held at that number. Mrs. Kinzer reported there are 20 eligible registrants in Marin for the September draft.

Tiburon Sets Budget Adoption

The Tiburon City Council will adopt a $685,000 budget and set the city property tax rate when it meets Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall. The council is required to set the property tax rate by Aug. 31.

If no further changes in the spending program are made, the tax rate is expected to be set at 80 cents per $100 assessed valuation, up from last year's 65-cent rate.

The council also will consider on second reading approval of a master plan for additions to Tiburon Lodge and of construction of a Bank of America branch nearby.

Three Persons Hurt In Three Accidents

Three persons were treated at Marin General Hospital yesterday and early today for injuries received in three Marin auto accidents, the California Highway Patrol reported.

Helen Marie Green, 28, of 947 Drake Avenue, Marin City, suffered a mild whiplash when she swerved on Highway 101 near the Corte Madera interchange to avoid another car and hit a divider fence. The accident happened about 12:15 p.m. yesterday.

A Sainta Venetia youth suffered minor injuries when his vehicle left North San Pedro Road near La Brea Way about 11:15 p.m. yesterday and rolled onto its side, the highway patrol said.

James D. Lazzarini, 17, of 140 Holmes Avenue, was treated for scrapes and bruised, the hospital reported.

A 37-year-old Sausaltio man suffered bruised ribs and facial cuts when a car in which he was a passenger collided with another vehicle on Drake Avenue in Marin City at 5:30 a.m. today.

The highway patrol said Willie Lewis of 561 Bridgeway was riding in a car driven by Pauline Moore, 32, of 1 Cole Drive, Marin City, which collided with a vehicle driven by Eugene Johnson, 25, of 720 Drae Avenue.

12,000 On Strike In Auto Plants

LONDON (UPI) — Strikes idled 12,000 workers in Britain's automotive industry today. The government said the nation's economy is bordering on a slump, partly because of a recession in the United States.

About 5,000 workers at the GKN-Sankey automotive components factory at Wellington, England, voted Friday to continue a two-week-old strike to press demands for a pay parity with the rest of the industry.

The strike has forced the layoff of thousands of workers at Chrysler, British Leyland, M.G. and Triumph truck and automobile plants in England and Scotland and a Massey-Ferguson tractor factory at Coventry, England.

At a Chrysler plant in Linwood, 600 men went on strike when the management increased the speed of assembly lines for IMP and Arrow cars. The company said the move had been approved by the men who walked out.

Automotive industry officials said unless the components factory and other strikes end soon about 20,000 men will be laid off by the end of next week. The components men are demanding a weekly wage increase of $15.60. Management has offered $9.60.

Michael Noble, president of the Board of Trade, said Friday the economy was "very much on the borderline of a slump and one hopes we will get it going up again."

"The American recession has something to do with the situation," he told a news conference during a tour of industrial areas in Scotland. "The Americans, however, appear to be beginning to get things right again."

He said much would depend on the extent to which the Nixon administration permits American investment abroad.

locate other journalists captured since the war began in Cambodia, Tanjag reported. "It is becoming more and more difficult" to locate captured correspondents, the minister was quoted as saying.

Earlier today, the French Television Network announced in Paris that Alain Clement, a member of a camera crew missing in Cambodia since July 7, has been released from captivity by the Viet Cong.

(In Phnom Penh, the Committee for the Safety of Foreign Correspondents in Cambodia also announced Clement's release as well ask that of Lydie Nicaise, a freelance journalist. The committee also said that Xavier Baron of the French news agency (AFP) and Johannes Duynisveld, a Dutchman in charge of a student newspaper, would be released shortly. There was no report of an American to be released.)

highway construction funds in their populous counties.

The bill, by Sen. James R. Mills, D-San Diego, raises Southern California's share of the state gasoline revenue from 55 to 60 per cent.

Passage of the landmark measure resulted indirectly from the U.S. Supreme Court's 1964 one-man, one-vote decision, which culminated in reapportionment of the Senate in 1966. This increased Southern California's representation in the Senate and ended Northern domination.

Two of the most powerful men ever to serve in the legislature wound up their legislative careers Friday night. Former Speaker Jess Unruh is surrendering his assembly seat to run against Gov. Ronald Reagan in November. Sen. Hugh M. Burns, D-Fresno, 68-year-old former Senate president pro tem, is retiring after a 34-year career.

The two houses acted on approximately 500 pieces of legislation during their final day in regular session.

Among the major issues they acted on were these:

Oil—The Assembly killed legislation sponsored by Unruh and Sen. Robert J. Lagomarsino, R-Ojai, banning all future oil drilling in the Santa Barbara Channel. Unruh later charged "the oil industry now has proved it owns state government."

Murder—The Assembly sent Reagan a bill by Assemblyman W. Craig Biddle, R-Riverside, making it murder to intentionally kill a human fetus.

Methadone—The Senate voted final passage to a bill by Assemblyman John Vasconcellos, D-San Jose, authorizing establishment of local methadone treatment clinics for heroin addicts.

School—the Assembly and Senate both voted final passage to legislation appropriating $150,000 to study dividing the sprawling Los Angeles School District into a dozen or more subdistricts. The author was Sen. John Harmer, R-Glendale.

Women—The Assembly sent the governor a bill by Assemblyman Charles Warren, D-Los Angeles, making it illegal for an employer to discriminate on the basis of sex.

Mansion—Both houses passed a bill changing the future site of the governor's mansion from downtown Sacramento to a wooded bluff overlooking the American River. The author was Sacramento Assemblyman Leroy F. Greene.

Flag—both houses passed a bill by Assemblyman E. Richard Barnes, R-San Diego, making it a crime to defile the American flag.

Animal Protein Increase In Diets

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Although 50 per cent of the world's annual protein supply per person is supplied by cereal and starch roots, a corporate researcher foresees an increase in animal protein in human diets.

Dr. H. L. Wilcke, vice-president and director of corporate research for Ralston Purina Co., said while the world searches for new sources of protein on land and in the seas.

capital of Kompong Thom, 80 miles north of Phnom Penh. Kompong Thom has been subject to such action by the Communists for almost a month.

In a delayed report, the Cambodian high command said 70 Communist soldiers had been killed and 70 wounded by air strikes Thursday about 18 miles southeast of Phnom Penh. The air strikes were carried out by Cambodian planes, the command said.

South Vietnamese action was light, with Communist gunners firing some 60 rounds of mortar on South Vietnamese defenders at Fire Base O'Reilly, 390 miles north of Saigon and 10 miles east of the Laotian border.

American B52 bombers hit Communist targets five to six miles southwest of O'Reilly for the third straight day, as well as at other points along infiltration routes leading from Laos to the lowlands along the northern coast.

The U.S. Army reported "no direct contact" with Communist units, but one American was killed anw two wounded when an OH58 helicopter was shot down by Communist ground fire 12 miles northeast of Saigon Friday.

Lemon Rehired By Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — The Kansas City Royals today extended Bob Lemon's contract as manager through the 1971 season.

Lemon, 49, replaced Charlie Metro as Royals' manager on June 9.

"Under the circumstances, Lemon has done a fine job of placing the ball club in a competitive frame of mind," said Cedric Tallis, Royals' vice president, in making the announcement. "We believe much progress has been made which will be beneficial in the future.

batteries still going on Thursday in an area 19 miles from the west bank of the Suez Canal.

An Israeli military spokesman said today there were exchanges of fire across both the Lebanese and Jordanian cease-fire lines during the night. He said Israeli troops returned fire after the settlement of Misgav Am was shelled from Lebanese territory.

Israeli troops also returned fire when the settlement of Gesher in the Jordan Valley was shelled from Jordanian territory.

There were no Israeli casualties in either incident, the spokesman said.

Mission Setting For Nuptial Vows

Mission San Rafael Arcangel in San Rafael was the setting for the wedding of Vicki Ann Rademacher to Christopher Dennis Cowman of Fairfax on Sunday afternoon.

Matron of honor for Vicki was Mrs. Donald May Jr. of Fairfax, and the bridesmaids were Candis Cowman of San Anselmo, the bridegroom's sister; and Denise Damele of San Francisco.

Timothy Cowman of San Anselmo was his brother's best man. The guests were seated by John Kalogiannis of Santa Venetia and Craig Cunningham of San Rafael.

A reception was given afterward at the Deer Park Villa restaurant in Fairfax.

After they return from a wedding trip to Portland, Ore., the Cowmans will live in Fairfax.

Vicki is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rademacher of San Rafael. Now employed with the Carousel beauty salon in San Anselmo, she is a graduate of San Rafael High School and Marinello Beauty College. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bini of San Rafael are the bride's grandparents.

Christopher's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cowman of San Anselmo. He was graduated from Sir Francis Drake High School and is employed with S and T Motors in San Francisco.

SEW SIMPLE

Woven Trims Work Best For Banding The Polyester Knits

DEAR EUNICE,

When sewing with the polyester knits and you can't find the type of banding to match your fabric, is it all right to use the same knit material in double thickness for the neck and sleeve bands?

Also, I just recently became aware of your column while taking a trip through the Midwest. How does one go about getting their questions answered if our paper doesn't carry your column?

MRS. K.W.E.

DEAR MRS. K.W.E.:

The exact type of trim or banding that is used by the manufacturers for trim is seldom available to fabric shops. However, recently there have been some very good looking woven trims that come in a variety of colors and these should become available in all areas soon. As to the double layer of knitted fabric for the banding, yes, it could be used. However, it will probably be more attractive if you use some type of contrast in color.

In answer to your last question, I only wish my column were available everywhere. In the meantime, perhaps your friends will send you a copy each week. I do not answer personal letters, but I choose questions that have the most general interest and try to share these with our readers.

MRS. BEN JOHN IS this week's Tailor Trix pressing board winner for her following sewing suggestion.

"Although I am now living in Japan, I still love to read Sew Simple which relatives send to me. I'd like to submit the following sewing tip for your Tailor Trix award.

"After your facing has been stitched to any inner curve, such as a neckline or armhole, grade your seams as usual, then carefully clip the seam allowance to release your fabric and allow a nice cured area. Since these seams must be clipped clear to the stitching line, instead of clipping them together, clip the seam allowance on the layer of fabric as usual. Next, clip the second seam allowance between the first ones. This gives the same effect of very close clipping without shredding the seam allowance."

DEAR EUNICE:

I have used some of the new bonding agent that fuses two layers of fabric together but am not happy with the results. I used it at the neckline of a dress and it shows through. Now I am wondering how in the world this can be removed?

MRS. S.L.B.

DEAR MRS. S.L.B.:

Sorry you didn't read the long

column I wrote concerning these fusible bonding agents. I have never seen any product that works perfectly for each and every type of fabric. For this reason, I warned our readers to experiment first on some scraps of fabric. If you can see the bonding line, it was not the type of interfacing to use for your dress.

The type I have used can be removed by warming the area with a warm, not hot iron, and carefully pulling it apart. Once again, this is not always successful. A word of advice — test before, not after, to avoid a mishap.

Eunice Farmer gives illustrated instructions on how to make professional looking sleeves in her booklet "All About Sleeves." To obtain your booklet send 10 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request for it to Sew Simple in care of the Independent-Journal.

Kathleen Gail Flaherty Recites Vows With Richard C. Newton II

Exchanging marriage vows at Bidwell Memorial Presbyterian Church in Chico were Kathleen Gail Flaherty of Terra Linda and Richard Carl Newton II of Yuba City.

Robin Horvath of San Rafael was Kathleen's maid of honor and Donna Jarvis of Hollister was the bridesmaid for the Aug. 15 rite.

Randall Newton of Yuba City was his brother's best man. The bride's brother, Kevin Craig Flaherty of Terra Linda, seated the guests.

A reception was held in Chico after the ceremony and another reception will be given Aug. 30 around the pool at the home of the bride's parents in Terra Linda, Mr. and Mrs. Richard R. Flaherty.

The couple went to Southern California for a wedding trip and returned to Marysville for water skiing. They will live in Atwater.

Kathleen is a graduate of Terra Linda High School. She attended Chico State College and plans to enter Stanislaus State College. She has been employed with the Terra Linda Recreation Center.

The bride is the sister of Richard and Laurel Flaherty of Terra Linda. Her local grandparents are Mrs. Betty Foley of Novato and Mr. and Mrs. William Luther of San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Carl Newton of Yuba City are the bridegroom's parents. Richard, who is a teacher at Atwater High School, was graduated from Yuba City High School, Yuba Junior College and Chico State College.

Garden Gathering Honors Debutantes

By MOLLY MARIN

Marin debutantes Jennifer Relfe and Mara Hunter were honored at a party given last night by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Relfe and Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter, all of Kentfield, at the Hunter home.

Guests were the other Marin debs, their escorts and their fathers, who gathered for a barbecue supper at yellow and white umbrella tables placed throughout the garden area. They also enjoyed swimming and dancing under a canopied pavilion.

Jennifer was graduated from Santa Catalina School for Girls and plans to enter the University of Pacific next month. Mara will go to Los Angeles to become a freshman at the University of Southern California. She was graduated in May from San Dominico.

PARTICIPATING in the testimonial dinner tonight for the retiring Consul General of Mexico, Adolfo G. Dominguez, and his wife, Milla, will be Dr. and Mrs. Mario Ramos of San Rafael. The dinner will be held at the Grand Ballroom of the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco for the Mexican couple, who will return to Mexico City to live and where their family resides.

Mr. Ramos, who is the president of the Instituto Cultural Mexicano, will introduce Fulton Freeman, former American ambassador to Mexico, during the dinner. Mrs. Ramos, a former opera singer, will sing the traditional farewell sang "La Golondrina," to conclude the banquet.

Guests of the Ramoses for the evening will be Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Kilgore of Tiburon, Col. and Mrs. Donald Roberts of San Francisco, Mrs. James T. Ashton of San Rafael, mother of Mrs. Ramos, and her son Rolf Brunkhorst Jr.

YOU DON'T suppose it could have been delayed shock that sent the new Sausalito-San Francisco ferry "Golden Gate" limping back to port with a blown rod two days after being greeted on the bay with a three-cannon salute, do you? Colorful Marinite and poet Leon Spiro sailed his

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

A Heartbreak Is Daydreaming About The Big Reconciliation

DEAR HELEN:

Could you please print again your column on "What Is Being Hurt"? It was written by a girl who, like me, is trying to recover from a broken heart. Thanks. — ANGELA

DEAR ANGELA:

How about this as a substitute? — What Is Heartbreak?

Heartbreak is smiling to cover up a heartbreak.

It's telling everyone "We weren't right for each other," but knowing you were perfect for one another — so why doesn't he know?

It's wanting to be alone so you can daydream about the big reconciliation.

Heartbreak is trying to look happy when he sees you. If you don't he'll feel bad, because he's hurt you (he's that kind of guy.)

It's defending him when someone puts him down — even if it isn't your business any more.

It's wishing he'd go away so you could forget him — but stretching your neck at any social event to look for him. (And then he's with her.)

It's remembering the things you said that you shouldn't have said, and saying "I'm sorry" to his picture that's still on the back of your dresser. It's hoping every telephone call will be him, but it never is because that last fight blew everything. So he treats you like a sister, and how can you get around that?

Heartbreak is a pillow full of tears, a soul full of emptiness, a heart full of unanswered love, and a head full of beautiful memories. It's hoping that maybe . . . someday . . . somehow . . . but knowing deep down you aren't even fooling yourself.

Heartbreak is realizing too late that you're stupid and you goofed. — HEARTBROKEN

DEAR HELEN:

Could you once more give us the name and address of the organization that sends our letters to our servicemen in Vietnam? — THE GIRLS

DEAR GIRLS:

Send your letters to servicemen inside another envelope addressed to:

VIETNAM MAIL CALL,
Box 3104-A,
Columbus, Georgia, 31903

Enclose five cents for each letter, to help cover overseas postage. Include your name and address on your stationery; write as interestingly as possible about upbeat things. Even if you don't get an answer to every letter, you'll know that you cheered someone who badly needed a note from home. — H.

P.S.: Here's another way you can write. The USO has just begun "Operation Pen Pal." Put your letter inside a stamped (six cents) envelope and address it to:

Operation Pen Pal
USO Executive Office—Saigon
APO San Francisco 96243

This column is dedicated to family living, so if you're having kid trouble or just plain trouble, let Helen help you. Address Helen Bottel in care of the Independent-Journal.

"armed" cutter "Rafella" in full dress as a ship of the line circa 1789 out to greet the new ferryboat last Saturday and "properly cannonaded" her Aboard the black and yellow cutter, which is gaffheaded and rigged in the old style, was poet Jon Sharp from the University of Ipswich. The Rafella carried British ensigns aloft in honor of the Englishman.

Spiro, who has said that he "gives formal salutes to boats of character and dignity provided their masters are reputable," no doubt looks forward to firing off another cannonade salute when the "Golden Gate" returns to bay waters.

PRESS GUIDE IS AVAILABLE

A guide for press chairmen of organizations interested in getting news to the Marin Women's Section of the Independent Journal is available at the San Rafael main office and the Novato, Mill Valley and Southern Sonoma I-J offices.

The booklet, "Getting News Into Your Newspaper," is issued as a service of the Independent-Journal Women's Section to assist press chairmen for women's organizations.

The guide explains policies of coverage, how to prepare news stories and meeting notices, and the special stories and features emphasized by the section.

The booklets at the San Rafael office may be obtained from the switchboard on the main floor.

Vows Said In Larkspur Garden Rite

Power Situation Called Dangerous

NEW YORK (UPI) — Government and utility industry officials warn that much of the eastern half of the United States and perhaps the entire Midwest will experience some form of power disruption this summer, either a "blackout" or reduced voltage "brownout."

Sharply rising power consumption coupled with a long-term lag in generating capacity has created what the Tennessee Valley Authority is calling "an emergency" situation.

Legislature Votes For Job Equality

The California state legislature has passed a bill barring job discrimination on the basis of sex. The bill, Assembly Bill 22 which was introduced by Assemblyman Charles Warren (Dem.-L.A.), adds the word "sex" to the State Fair Employment Practice Act which now prohibits job discrimination on the basis of race, religion, color, ancestry or national origin.

The Senate voted Thursday 25-6 to pass the bill which is similar to proposals Warren has introduced for four years.

It was returned to the Assembly yesterday for concurrence on an amendment added by the Senate Finance Committee which provides that insurance companies can maintain actuary tables based on sex. Mike Hill, a legislative assistant to Warren said, "Men and women pay different fees on their life insurance right now. At some future time insurance companies will have to lump men and women together and figure a life expectancy figure for the average person."

Another amendment added by the Senate finance committee which would wipe out all state protective labor laws for women was amended out in the Senate, Hill said.

A November Wedding Set

The engagement of Nevin Claire Valentine to Stephen Lamar Saunders of Petaluma has been announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Valentine of Napa.

Nevin was graduated from Napa High School, attends Chico State College and is employed with Pini Hardware in Novato.

Mr. and Mrs. James T. Saunders of Petaluma are Stephen's parents and he is the grandson of Mrs. Norman Saunders, also of Petaluma.

Now assistant manager of Pini Hardware, Stephen was graduated from Petaluma High School, Santa Rosa Junior College and Sacramento State College.

The couple plan a Nov. 1 wedding at St. Peter's Chapel at Mare Island.

San Francisco Pays Farewell To Bufano

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—San Franscisco has paid a last farewell to sculptor Benny Bufano, the eccentric little artist found dead of a heart attack in his studio earlier this week.

"Ciao, Benny, Ciao! You are part of our lives from here on in," said Mayor Joseph Alioto at a requiem mass in St. Patrick's Catholic Church Friday. The city lowered its flags to half staff for rites.

Alioto urged that Bufano's St. Francis of the Guns, made of melted weapons collected after the Sen. Robert F. Kennedy slaying, be installed in the Civic Center.

The statue is now at Expo '70 in Osaka, Japan, and was the subject of Benny's last great quarrel. He said the city owed him $14,500 for the work.

Benny's right name was Beniamino Benvenuto, and he was born near Rome in 1898—or maybe it was 1889. Nobody knew Bufano's exact age.

For decades Bufano scorned religion, but he arranged for a church funeral not long before he was found dead in his studio last Tuesday. His request as for the mayor to give the eulogy "on behalf of the city and on behalf of Benny."

Alioto told the audience of 600 that Bufano always sought to pattern his life after St. Francis of Assisi, the lover of birds and animals and the patron saint of this city.

Bufano's frequent fancies, the mayor said, were a part of his uniqueness. "Sometimes legends speak more than truth," Alioto suggested.

The sculptor, a life-long pacifist, often said he chopped off part of his trigger finger and sent to President Wilson, and at the mass the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Clement J. McKenna said "the great crusade of Bufano's life was for peace."

Friends recalled how the diminutive artist survived perpetual poverty. He lived 25 years for free in the San Francisco Press club and was fed by some restaurants in return for works rendered.

Immunization Fail To Halt Diphtheria Spread

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI) — A week-long immunization drive has failed to slow the spread of diptheria in San Antonio. Health officials fear the epidemic could cover the entire state once school starts.

Four more confirmed cases and 11 suspected cases were reported Friday, bringing to 59 the number of confirmed cases in the city this year. Two persons have died of the disease.

The bulk of the cases have struck in the predominately Mexican-American and Negro west and southwest sides of town, but in the past two days cases also have turned up in other neighborhoods.

"The disease is not seeking any particular street or block," said Dr. William R. Ross, city health director. "It has been like a checkerboard. You never know where it is going to strike next."

Dr. Vernon Knight, chairman of microbiology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, said any Texas school not requiring immunization of school children is "wide open for an epidemic."

More than 83,000 innoculations have been given in San Antonio since the epidemic was officially declared last week. Officials at the municipal auditorium announced they would continue giving shots until 5 p.m. today.

Long lines of people snaked around for blocks outside the auditorium waiting for inoculations. Officials said the lines were moving quickly because more nurses have been added and they are more experienced after a week's work.

State Sen. Chet Brooks said in Houston he will investigate the possibility of legislating statewide immunization requirements for Texas school children.

Such requirements are now set by individual school districts and the rules vary widely.

Budget For Fairfax Is Due Monday

After two months of budget discussions, and almost two months into the new fiscal year, the Fairfax City Council is scheduled to approve a $550,371 budget for 1970-71 at its 8 p.m. meeting Monday.

The figure will hold the city's tax rate at $1.74 per $100 assessed valuation.

The proposed budget presented to the council June 22 by Frances R. Lestanguet, city clerk and administrator, totaled $554,171 and recommended a 15-cent tax rate increase.

After weeks of often heated and sometimes bitter discussion, the council managed to make deletions totaling approximately $6,000 and agreed to use an estimated $17,000 in interest from a gas tax maintenance fund for 1970-71 revenue, and thus was able to avoid the tax increase.

Also on Monday's agenda is the question of hiring a full-time city administrator. The council voted Aug. 6 to hire an administrator and reaffirmed that vote four days later. However, the mechanics of hiring were put off until Monday.

Franklin D. Roosevelt was the first president to make a speech of acceptance at a nominating convention.

Small Craft Harbor Report To Be Studied

The Mill Valley Planning Commission will meet with the city's parks and recreation commission Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall to consider a feasibility report for the development of the city's small craft harbor.

In other business, the planning commission will consider William E. Cullen's proposal to build 64 condominium units on 32 acres on Warner Ridge. The matter was continued from Aug. 10 after a motion to approve the project died for lack of a second.

The commission also will review the city council's rejection on Monday of an application by Trans-Marin Properties to rezone a parcel of land at La Goma Street and Sycamore Avenue to permit construction of about 85 apartments. The commission approved the rezoning at its last meeting.

NEGLECTED BUT A GREAT BUY
This house needs some sprucing-up, some imagination, but if you're not afraid to apply a little elbow grease, and a small amount of money, you might wind up with the bargain of the season. Two bedrooms and a sewing room upstairs and two baths, a big bedroom and a huge family room downstairs. The living room has a fireplace, and there's a great view from every room. Huge decks run the length of each floor with great room for private outdoor living. On an enormous wooded lot with possible future building sites. $34,950.

HERE'S A COMPROMISE!

Looking for a home in a top area, with 3 or 4 bedrooms, 2 baths, a fun family room, utility room, level front and rear patios AND a Bay view? Finding that for this type and quality of home the prices are astronomical? Here's the reason this home can be bought so reasonable — highway noise. Most of the problem has been solved, however, by a wrap-around, glass-enclosed deck. Consider it a minor annoyance in return for so much quality living. $41,900.

Sugar Plant Tankers Are Let To Pass

CROCKETT (UPI) —A truce of sorts has been called in the strike at the California and Hawaii Sugar Co. plant.

Pickets agreed Friday to allow eight tank cars loaded with 80,000 gallons of liquid sugar to leave the company's Crockett plant for Del Monte Corp. in Oakland which is preparing to can this summer's peach crop.

In return, the company promised to stop loading and shipping sugar until a strike settlement is reached. The Sugar Workers Union has been on strike since June 1 in a labor contract dispute.

Two nights ago, Contra Costa Sheriff's deputies and police were called out when several windows in one building were broken and administrative employes' cars vandalized.

After a meeting with union officials early Friday, a company spokesman said, "we decided that this will not get anywhere, so no more sugar cars will be shipped or loaded until we get an agreement."

Sheriff's deputies guarding the tank cars said they arrested one picket for being drunk and disorderly.

CH's dispute with the union centers around a union demand for cost-of-living increases. There have been no contract negotiations since Aug. 13 and no talks are scheduled.

Marinites To Attend Session

Three Marin County participants in a nationwide "Walk for Hunger" will attend a special coordinating conference Tuesday in St. Paul, Minn.

Attending will be Colleen Fitzhenry of Kentfield, Annette Lareau of Fairfax and Robert Morgen of San Anselmo.

The "Walk for Hunger," sponsored by the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, will be held Sept. 20. In Marin County, a walk will start at Redwood High School in Larkspur at 7 a.m. and follow circuitous, 20-mile route throughout Southern Marin.

Walkers will be paid for mileage they travel and proceeds will go to the foundation, foreign antihunger efforts and the county's supplemental food program.

Three To Take Part In Session

Three Marinites will take part in the California state conference and membership meeting of the U.S. Humane Society Sept. 19-20 in Pasadena.

Dr. Virgil S. Hollis, county schools superintendent, will moderate a panel discussion. Mrs. Pat Sherman, past project director of county schools, will make a multi-media presentation.

Mel Morse, executive director of the Marin Humane Society, will serve as master of ceremonies at an awards banquet.

LAW IN ACTION

From the State Bar Of California

Conversion And Accession

In "conversion" someone takes another's personal property, depriving him of his control of possession. It may be innocent as when someone mistakenly takes a raincoat or he finds that he has bought a stolen item. Still, an "innocent converter" must hand over the item to its rightful owner.

"Accession" happens when the converter does something to increase the value of the item. Suppose Brown who innocently buys a used car stolen from Green spends money on it to increase its value. The true owner, Green, learning that Brown has his car, can claim it.

Before California courts decide such a case they want to know if the conversion was innocent or willful. If innocent, the court then wants to know which is the greater, the improvement or the item's original value.

If improvements are greater, then the "converter" keeps the item and pays the original owner for the basic item. Otherwise, the original owner pays for the improvements and gets his item back.

As for the stolen car, if Brown merely put on new tires and seat covers, then he must return the car to the original owner and in turn get repaid for what he spent. But if he reworked the whole car, and his improvements exceed the car's basic value, then Brown could keep the car and pay the first owner for what the value of the car had been.

But Brown gets no protection if he knew that the car had been stolen. The owner can get his property plus improvements for nothing. Indeed he might also make Brown pay damages for depriving him of the use of his car.

"Confusion" means that goods owned by different persons are so intermingled that nobody can ascertain his separate interests. If the confusion is innocent, the owners become "tenants in common" in the property.

Kimmel Among Nine To Plead On Drug Counts

James David Kimmel, former Novato High School teacher, and eight others are scheduled to enter pleas Wednesday in Southern Sonoma Municipal Court to charges of cultivating and possessing marijuana.

Kimmel, 34, and his wife, Carol Lee, 36, were arrested Aug. 12 at their Sonoma Valley home when Sonoma County sheriff's deputies said they found 500 marijuana plants growing there. Judge Alexander J. McMahon released the defendants on their own recognizance.

Others charged are Quinn Brant Berry, 27; Lynn E. Berry, 21; Richard Melvin Romelli, 23; Shirley Romelli, 25; Gene Leland Barrot, 22; Jeffrey D. Ross, 22, and Robert William Prushko, 18. The seven gave city of Sonoma addresses.

Sentencing Set In Check Case

Richard Anthony Alonzo, 18, of no known address, has been ordered to appear in Marin Superior Court Aug. 31 for setting of a sentencing date on a charge of possessing a check with intent to defraud others.

Alonzo, at a municipal court preliminary hearing yesterday on two check possession counts, pleaded guilty to one of them and the other was dismissed.

Alonzo was arrested by San Rafael police July 23 and accused of passing fraudulent checks in a tavern.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

By DR. THEODORE R. VAN DELLEN

Tender Tissue, Inflamed Veins Cause Hemorrhoidal Discomfort

Hemor rhoidal veins are in an area where they are subjected to constant irritation and injury. Slight tears in the membranes of the lower rectum and anal region are followed by bacterial invasion and inflammation. These veins have thin walls and are susceptible to infection, swelling and rupture. Most infections are so mild they are overlooked because the slight rectal soreness is present for a day or two and complete healing occurs.

the opening of the anus and are covered with skin. When acutely inflamed, they are extremely painful. Blood clots distend the vein to such an extent it protrudes to the outside. A bluish swelling the size of the little finger is noted. The nodule develops rapidly and is so tender that sitting becomes an ordeal. These lesions are most common in sedentary workers.

HEMORRHOIDAL DISCOMFORT of this type goes away spontaneously, but meanwhile temporary relief can be obtained by applying an anesthetic ointment and sitting in a tub of hot water. The physician hastens healing by opening the distended hemorrhoid and allowing the clotted blood to escape. This is not a painful procedure and prevents many days of suffering.

The internal hemorrhoidal veins are in the lining of the anal canal. Soreness and discomfort occur when they become inflamed. Straining at stool leads to a painful protrusion of the inflamed vein, and now and then blood is noted. Here, too, local anesthetic ointments offer temporary relief. Shrinking agents have been advocated but are not always successful. Cold packs followed in 6 to 10 hours by a series of hot sitz baths are effective.

CURE IS POSSIBLE when the entire plexus of veins is removed. Injection treatments help when hemorrhoids are small, but these have to be repeated at intervals to control the condition. This process is troublesome and time-consuming.

PERSPIRES HEAVILY

W. R. writes: Is the person who perspires less in warm humid weather more comfortable than the heavy sweater?

REPLY

Yes, but not if he wears the heavy sweater. When the humidity is high, the air is saturated with water. As a result, perspiration does not evaporate from the surface as readily as when the air is dry. Then the heavy sweater is at a disadvantage.

On the other hand, he will appreciate a breeze which will cool him off. In contrast, the person who does not sweat at all is miserable under these circumstances and usually overheats and develops a fever.

MEAT AND WEARINESS

M. C. writes: If I eat more meat, will it help overcome my fatigue?

REPLY

It might, provided your present meat intake is low. The important aspect of your question is: Why are you fatigued? Send stamped, self-addressed envelope for our leaflet on fatigue.

LOOSENED FINGERNAILS

Mrs. A. L. writes: What causes lifting or loosening of the fingernails from the nail bed? Is there a cure?

REPLY

Injury and infection are the most common culprits and cure depends upon the cause of the nail disorder.

ALLERGY AND CANCER

A. P. writes: Is an allergic person more susceptible to cancer than others?

REPLY

No.

Southern Marin—All Kinds Of Things, Places, People

The diversity of Sausalito and its neighbors is evident in this aerial photo. Highway 101, starting at bottom left, winds through the brushy heights of Waldo Grade, past uncompleted Sausalito apartments and troubled Martin Luther King School, past Marin City's apartment buildings, to disappear across Richardson Bay. Bridgeway enters from lower right to lead the eye past posh apartments, Marinship's industry and dilapidation, the Oriental sprawl of houseboats and marine life at Gates 5 and 6, and the Waldo heliport at the foot of the Richardson Bay Bridge. Across the bay at upper right on tree-dotted hills is the campus of Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary. Da Silva Island, scene of Marin's most famous pot bust, the Werber case, is the woods-shrouded spot at the north end of the bridge at top. At center, a large scratched-over open space marks the former site of the American Distillery, now being transformed into apartments. Just north of the distillery site is the big paved playground of Martin Luther King School. To left of the distillery site are seen the clustered portable buildings of Bayside School, Bayside's baseball diamond, the Sausalito School District office, and old Bayside School, now the Sausalito Art Center. In Rpchardson Bay, the chaotic sprawl of Gate 5's houseboats contrasts sharply with the neatly serried ranks of sailboats, motor yachts and fiberglass pleasure craft lying sedately at their Clipper Yacht Harbor moorings. Paralleling Bridgeway, then plunging off through the marsh toward Mill Valley, is the spur line of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad. In the foreground, an arabesque of new streets lies unused, awaiting future development to accommodate more Sausalitans.

Bible Verse Relative To Today's Youth

By LOUIS CASSELS
UPI Religion Writer

There is a verse of Scripture which every parent should commit to memory.

It's found in the Old Testament in the 16th Chapter of the First Book of Samuel: "The Lord sees not as man sees. Man looks on the outward appearance, but the Lord looks on the heart."

Many a harsh family row might be avoided if parents could learn to look on their children as the Lord does: focusing not on the outward appearance but on the heart.

Being bald and middle-aged, I have no difficulty understanding why people of my generation are put off by some of the hair styles and clothing now in vogue among young people.

What I cannot comprehend is why otherwise-intelligent adults should attach such overriding importance to what is, after all, a question of taste, not a basic moral issue.

Last week, in Washington, D. C., a congressman learned that his son had been arrested and jailed on a charge of marijuana possession. Never mind the Congressman's name. He and the boy have already suffered enough, and if you missed the first spate of publicity which the incident received, I'm not going to identify them again now.

What deserves attention is a statement which the congressman made to the press at the time that he posted $2,500 bond to secure his 19-year-old son's release from jail.

He said he had told his son, "I'll give you one chance, and give you written conditions. If you break them, I'll put you back in jail."

And what were the written conditions? The lawmaker listed them as follows:

His son must "get his hair cut, and short, and now."

He must "keep himself shaved."

He must "visit a professional barber" at least once every 10 days.

He must not "wear hippie clothes."

He must return to school (from which he dropped out two years ago).

He must avoid use of drugs.

No parent could quarrel with the last two admonitions—that the young man go back to school and lay off drugs. They are clearly aimed at protecting his welfare in essential respects.

But note, please, that the first four of the six "written conditions" were entirely concerned with the youth's outward appearance.

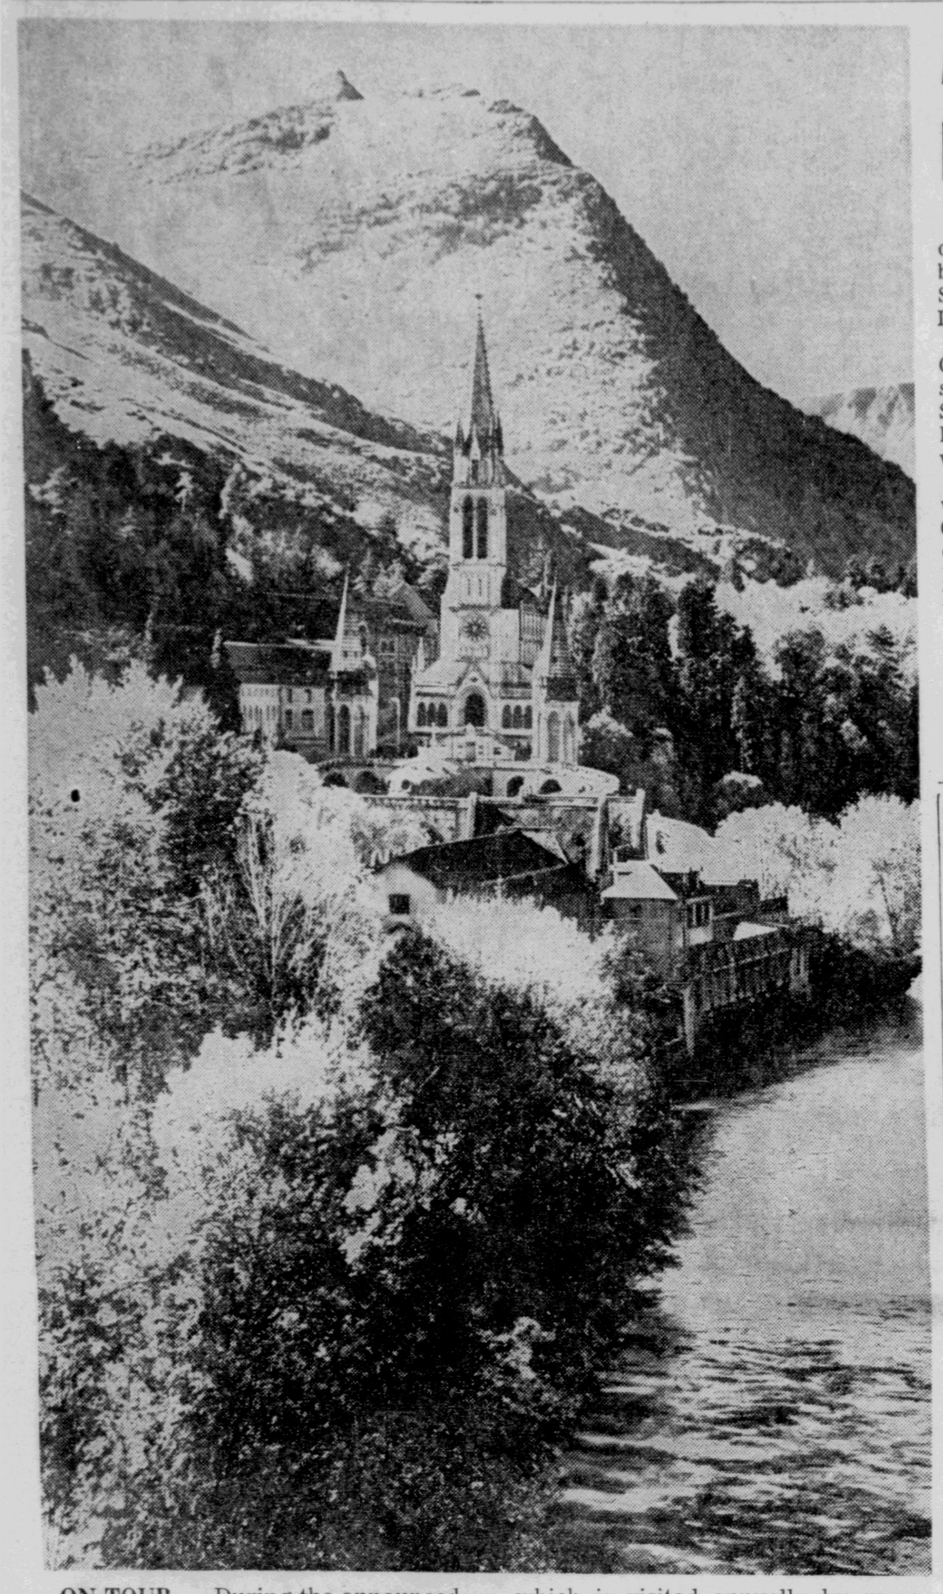
It staggers credulity that it should be necessary to point it out, but perhaps it is necessary: long hair is neither more nor less moral, neither more nor less acceptable in the sight of God, neither more nor less manly if you want to put it on that basis, than short hair, or no hair at all.

There may be some validity to the widely held adult belief that children tend to behave as they dress—that is, to live up to the roles for which they are costumed. To the degree that is true,

But any trouble a child is apt to get into from dressing up like a "hippie" is not a patch on the disasters that can result from total estrangement from his parents.

When young people see their parents making a big fuss over a superficial and relatively trivial thing, such as hair length, they find it difficult to take seriously the other "values" which their parents commend to them.

Much better a long-haired, well-loved child than one who has a neat crewcut and a heart full of bitterness.



ON TOUR — During the announced October tour of Europe, which will be directed by Rev. Michael D. Harriman of Marin, one of the major points of interest will be Lourdes, which is visited annually by more than three million pilgrims. Father Harriman will say a Mass in the grotto.

Marin Priest Will Direct European Tour In October

A three week autumn air tour of Europe has been announced by Rev. Michael D. Harriman of St. Isabella's Parish in Terra Linda.

Father Harriman is Marin County co-ordinator of youth services for the Archdiocese of San Francisco, as well as Catholic chaplain of Marin County Juvenile Hall.

Under his direction the tour will fly across the Atlantic on Oct. 12 to visit principal scenes of Catholic interest in Ireland, France, Italy, Austria, and England.

From Shannon the party will travel through the "ring of Kerry" and Killarney, Adare, Blarney, Cork, Limerick, and Galway.

Father Harriman will celebrate a pilgrims' Mass at the shrine of Knock, in County Mayo, where the Virgin Mary appeared outside the parish church nearly 90 years ago.

After visiting Dublin, the group will fly to Lourdes, there to join in devotions with thousands of other pilgrims from all over the world. From there the group will fly to Italy.

"Italy has more faces than any other country in Europe," says Father Harriman. "They include those of the Roman empire and the renaissance; those of grand opera, industry and fashion."

The group's first full day in Rome will begin with Mass at St. Peter's followed by a detailed examination of the interior of the vast structure, and an audience with Pope Paul VI.

Leaving Rome the group will stop for a noonday Mass and visit at Assisi, the birthplace of St. Francis. The next stop will be Florence.

By way of Bologna and the shrine of St. Anthony of Padua, the group will arrive at Venice where Father Harriman's Sunday Mass will be celebrated in the historic basilica of St. Mark.

Over the snow-capped Alps the travelers will fly to Vienna and drive to the nearby shrine of Mariazell. Then they will fly direct to London.

The tour will conclude with a medieval banquet in the great hall of the castle at Bunratty, Ireland.

Information about tour membership may be obtained from Father Harriman at St. Isabella's rectory.

Head Of Akbar College Will Play At Church

Ali Akbar Khan, president of Ali Akbar College, will present classical music of North India at 9:30 a.m. services tomorrow at the Methodist Church of Mill Valley.

Khan, playing the sarod, will be accompanied by Shankar Ghosh on the tabla (drums).

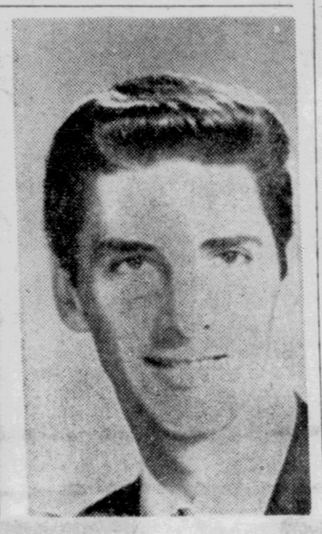
Ali Akbar College is known throughout the United States for its outstanding curriculum in North Indian music.

Rev. George P. Carter, pastor, said those attending tomorrow's service should "let themselves go and enter into a world dominated by the (to us) strange sounds of the sitar and other Indian instruments."

"If we can free ourselves to enter that world of music and meditation, who knows where the Spirit will lead us?"

He added the service is open to the public.

Of the culture presented in the music, Khan has said: "Our sages developed music from time immemorial for the mind to take shelter in the pure being which stands apart from the bond as one's true self. Real music is not for wealth, not for honors or even the joys of the mind . . . but as a path for realization and salvation."



SPECIAL GUESTS

Adron and Patti Lockyer, gospel singers, recording artists and evangelists, will be special guests at 11 a.m. tomorrow at the North Marin Assembly of God, 1370 South Novato Boulevard in Novato. The Lockyers will present a program of contempory and traditional music and ministry.

Vatican Eases Requirements For Joining Monastic Orders

VATICAN CITY (UPI)—The Vatican has relaxed requirements for entry into monastic life under newly released regulations that permit nuns and monks greater freedom of movement.

Vatican officials said this week the regulations have been in effect since they were approved by Pope Paul VI on June 1. June 1.

Tedious bishops' investigations of the background and motives of persons entering religious life have been streamlined. A bishop no longer is required to make a full month inquiry to discover whether an aspiring nun is being forced or deceived into a convent. This outdated regulation was imposted in previous centuries when parents sometimes tried to force unmarried daughters into convents.

Aspiring novices no longer need a testimonial from the bishop of every diocese in which they have lived since the age of 14, a bureaucratic procedure now recognized as usually unnecessary.

Religious persons now may become superiors at the age of 35 instead of 40, and novice masters at 30 instead of 35.

Nuns have been formally permitted to make outings without permission of their superiors each time.

$250,000 Emergency Relief Fund For Peruvian Quake

NEW YORK (LC) — The board of directors of Lutheran World Relief has set aside $250,000 for emergency relief, rehabilitation, and reconstruction in Peru, according to an announcement issued here late in July.

Bernard A. Confer, executive secretary of the overseas aid agency, said $50,000 has been transmitted to the earthquake-wracked region for local purchase of agricultural and construction tools and "sorely needed" roofing materials.

It was the second time since the earthquake struck late in May that the agency forwarded funds. Shortly after the disaster, it forwarded $5,000 for the purchase of emergency supplies and transportation.

Both grants, Confer said, have been sent through Church World Service, "which had a core staff in the country when the earthquake struck and has since greatly expanded program to meet emergency requirements."

In addition to the funds, he continued, LWR has made available more than 3,000 kits composed of toilet articles and educational items for use by children in region devastated by the quake.

Also noted were the shipments of 3,500 blankets by air and 10,000 blankets by sea within two weeks after the earthquake. Like the funds, the blankets were channeled through CWS, Mr. Confer explained.

CWS, the overseas relief arm of the National Council of Churches, has been allotted two areas in the disaster zone under a coordination effort by the groups engaged in relief and rehabilitation.

The two areas encompass Huarmey and Aija and extend from the seacoast to an elevation of 16,000 feet. Inhabited by some 65,000 persons, a majority of whom are Quechua Indians, the two areas are about the size of Rhode Island.

Lutherans Report Membership Loss

NEW YORK — (LC) — Lutheran church bodies in North America sustained an overall loss of 16,058 members and the denomination's total membership dropped to 9,223,216 at the close of 1969, it was reported this week by the Lutheran Council in the USA.

An annual summary of statistics supplied by the various branches of Lutheranism disclosed a constituency of 8,919,526 baptized children and adults in the United States — a loss of 24,381 or .27 per cent — and of 303,690 in Canada — a gain of 8,323 or 2.81 per cent.

American Prelate Defends Curia

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — American Cardinal John J. Wright thinks people have got the wrong idea about the Curia, the Roman Catholic church's central government, where he works.

"They think of the Curia as a great sociological beast," the former Bishop of Pittsburgh said in an interview. "They regard it as an undersirable accretion to the gospel and to the primitive church."

But Wright, 60, looking back on his first year as the first American to head a Curia department, said the organization is a necessity to the church.

"There are those who have decided, for reasons I have never been able to grasp entirely, that the church should be decentralized," Wright said. "They say everything is in the hands of the Curia.

"Well, the Pope is the head of the church. He can't do all the work by himself, so he has these bureaus and commissions and congregations which we call the Curia."

Wright's department is the Congregation for the Clergy, which looks after parish priests around the world.

In any case, Wright said, local churches are taking over many of the tasks once done by the Curia in line with the Vatican Ecumenical Council's call for individual bishops to share in policy making. And the Curia, once solidly dominated by Italians, is becoming more international.

"I used to think the result of all this would be that there would be less mail," Wright said. "I've been gravely disillusioned," he added, eyeing a stack of letters on his desk.

"The bishop of the brand new diocese in Frica who would probably have written in once a year to ask what the Pope thinks about such and such, now writes to ask us to find out what all the other bishops are doing about whatever is the subject in hand.

"The result is an enormous amount of paperwork. "The Curia has become a kind of clearing house."

The cardinal said he would prefer pastoral duties to the office work that occupies much of his time here. But it was a very small complaint.

"The truth is I just love living in Rome," he said.

"I don't merely mean the Rome of the popes. I like the Rome of Virgil and Horace, the legendary Rome and all its surrounding little hill towns."

Wright's office is directly across from the Pope's windows, overlooking St. Peter's Square.

Pointing to the vast basilica across the square, he said:

"But this is the Rome I love best of all . . . the place where Christianity came alive."

At his comfortably furnished apartment a short walk away Wrighty relaxes with his hobbies — a collection of books and manuscripts about St. Joan of Arc which is reputed to be the most complete in the world, and a collection of records which leans heavily to what he calls "Mediterranean" composers: Verdi, Donizetti, Puccini, plus Mozart and Richard Strauss.

Vatican Issues New Policy On Patron Saints

VATICAN CITY (UPI)—Nations and religious organizations are barred from adopting more than one patron saint under new Vatican instructions downgrading the worship of Instructions published Friday by the Congregation for Divine Worship ordained an end to flamboyant language used to describe saints on days set aside for them.

At least 19 nations have more than one patron saint. The ruling exempts existing situations, but the Vatican indicated it would prefer that nations and religious organizations conform to the one-patron rule.

MARIN POP WARNER TEAMS PREPARE FOR SEASON OPENER

More than 700 boys ages 10-14 play Pop Warner League football in Marin County. This year a new team, the San Marin Mustangs, will join the Marin league. The Mustangs have been practicing five nights a week at San Marin High School in preparation for the start of the season Sept. 12. One of the team's prospects is halfback Larry Dauernheim, shown, at left, carrying the ball during a scrimmage, and, center, leading the offensive backs in a sprint. Man Who Should Know Favors The N.Y. Mets

Larry Jansen still feels that the Mets will win it again in the National League East. He believes Met pitching will shape up in the September stretch drive for the pennant.

"Pitching still is the name of the game," said Jansen in the way all pitching coaches talk about baseball.

Jansen doesn't know why Met pitching hasn't asserted itself before this. But he does know why pitching problems haven't been confined to a few teams this season.

"It's the dead ball," said Jansen in an ironical tone that gave an exact opposite meaning to his statement.

Long before anybody else suspected a rabbit ball had been surreptitously slipped into the majors this year by baseball brass, Jansen spotted it in the season opening series between the Giants and Braves at Atlanta.

Jansen cut one of the new balls open and discovered it not only was wrapped tighter but that the inside of the cover was smeared with a rubberized glue which fixed the cover firmly to the binding.

What Will They Think Of Next?

"What will they think of next?" asked Jansen. "They narrowed the strike zone. They lowered the mound. Now they have that dead ball. It's about time they did something for the pitchers."

Jansen is a pitching coach whose reputation as a most capable instructor must be soul satisfying to him. But he seldom talks about himself. He will talk about the young and old Giant pitchers he instructs.

Gaylord Perry speaks glowingly about Jansen. Perry credits Jansen for making a pitcher out of him. "I was just a thrower until Larry changed my three-quarter delivery into one from over-the-top," said Perry. "That was several years ago."

The sound pitching principles Perry learned from Jansen made it possible for the rangy righthander to survive a strict crackdown this season on the supersinker Perry had been throwing.

There were skeptics who thought Perry would become just another .500 pitcher after being deprived of the supersinker which, of course, everybody knew was a grease ball.

Supersinker With A New Name

There still are skeptics who think the forkball Perry now throws actually is his old supersinker with a new name. But the fact is thta Perry began experimenting with the forkball last spring — just in case there was a crackdown on his supersinker.

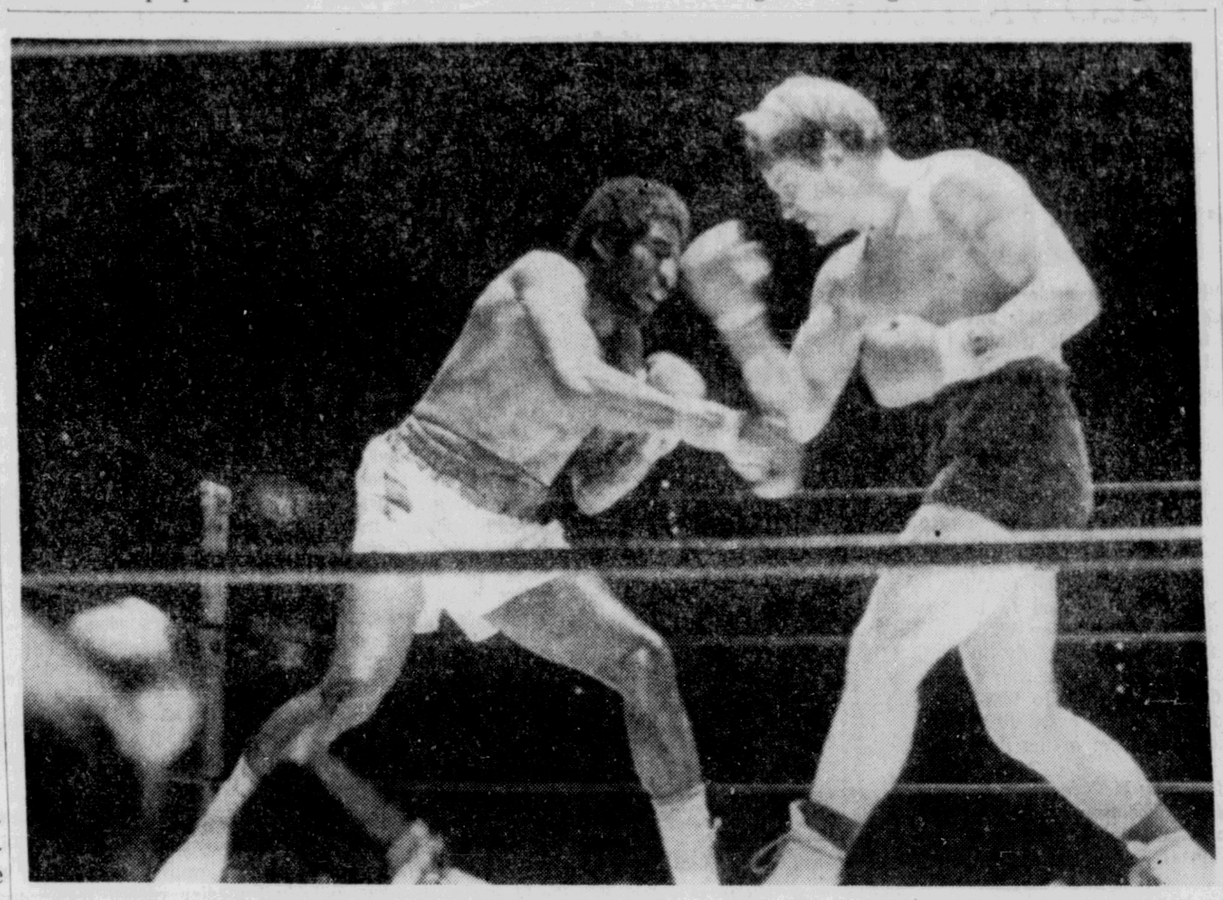
Maybe Perry does cut loose an occasional supersinker now in a tight jam but he no longer relies on it the way he once did. There was a time when 90 per cent of his pitches were supersinkers.

Perry never would have been able to make the switch from a supersinker pitcher to the one he now is without the basics Jansen taught him.

It was only a natural development that Jansen's reputation should win him offers from other clubs. He refuses to make any comment whatsoever about them. He's a quiet man about such things.

Bob Howsam, the man behind-the-scenes of Cincinnati's success this season, is one baseball executive aware of Jansen's talents. Howsam tride during the winter to get Jansen as pitching coach for the Reds.

A man with such a reputation as Jansen's should know what he is talking about when he says the Mets will win it again with their pitching.



ONE BRIGHT MOMENT

Fraser Scott (right), got in a good punch to the head of Luis Rodriguez during the first round of their middleweight fight Thursday night in Seattle. Rodriguez was not fazed, however, and the contender for Nino Benvenuti's world crown went on to take a 10-round decision over young Scott. (UPI telephoto)

Spurrier Returns To Scene Of Prime—49ers Vs. Miami

MIAMI (UPI)—Quarterback Steve Spurrier hopes to avoid another abortive homecoming performance tonight when the San Francisco 49ers meet the Miami Dolphins.

Spurrier, a former All America at the University of Florida, failed last weekend in Tampa, Fla., to punch across a winning touchdown drive as the Niners lost their opening preseason contest to the Cleveland Browns.

The soft-speaking four-year pro gets an opportunity for the second straight game to show his stuff to fellow Floridians. Again, however, Spurrier will have to wait until the second half when 14-year pro John Brodie has finished his duties as the No. 1 signal caller.

Spurrier connected on 12 of 19 passes against the Browns but was foiled time and again during the second half in his efforts to snap a 10-10 deadlock.

TV DOUBLEHEADER

Television professional football fans will have a doubleheader tonight with the 49er-Miami (5 o'clock) and the Oakland-Los Angeles (8 o'clock) games to be carried by Channel 2.

The Browns beat him to it for the decisive margin.

Bill Tucker and Jimmy Thomas will start behind Brodie and Spurrier once again in the backfield. Regulars Ken Willard and Doug Cunningham both are injured.

Guards Elmer Collett and Kevin Hardy and defensive end Stan Hindman also are expected to remain on the bench with injuries. Cas Banaszek says he wants to start at his usual tackle spot, but the three-year pro from Northwestern will have to overcome a bad shoulder.

The Dolphins, unbeaten under new coach Don Shula, should have a little extra motivation for tonight's exhibition. Now entering their fifth season, the Dolphins never have won more than two games in a row.

Scrambling Bob Griese hopes to give the Niner defensive line as much trouble as he caused the Cincinnati Bengals last weekend. Griese ripped the Bengals for 15 completions in 19 attempts for a 20-10 victory.

Mudcat's Magic World Collapses

CLEVELAND (UPI) — The magic world of Mudcat Grant is looking a little pedestrian these days.

The 35-year-old righthander had been the most consistently effective reliever in baseball until a couple of weeks ago. H took another shelling Friday night as the Oakland A's fell to the Cleveland Indians, 6-3.

Grant came to the mound in the eighth inning with Cleveland leading 4-3. Then, boom! Home runs by Ted Uhlaender and Vada Pinson, plus another basehit, sent the Mudcat to the dugout early. He retired only one man.

The sudden collapse of Grant is not exactly the greatest thing that could happen to the A's, who already were having their troubles keeping in step with first place Minnesota. The Twins' victory Friday night shoved Oakland 6 1-2 games behind in the American League West.

Jim Hunter, the slumping starter of Oakland's four-man rotation, failed for the fifth time in a row to claim victory No. 16. He lasted seven innings, only to see his record fall to 15-11.

Hunter, haunted career-long by home runs from enemy bats, served up a couple more gopher balls Friday night. Duke Sims crashed a three-run job in the opening inning and Roy Foster did it with the bags empty in the sixth. In between, the Catfish set down 14 Cleveland batters in succession.

Staked to an early 3-0 lead, Indian starter Sam McDowell had more leeway than he really needed. Sudden Sam has not lost to the A's since 1968. He left the game with a reinjured thigh muscle but stayed around long enough to run his record to 18-8.

McDowell looked like a mere mortal in the second inning when Hunter blasted a home run and Tommy Davis drove in another run with a double.

The A's had another opportunity to take the lead in the eighth. Trailing 4-2, they rallied for a run off reliever Dean Chance. Tenace brought the tally in with a single, putting men on first and third with one out. But reliever Rick Austin came in to get Frank Fernandez to pop out and Tony LaRussa to look at three strikes.

Rams Favored Over Raiders

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The Los Angeles Rams, unbeaten in their first two exhibition starts, are listed as five-point favorites to beat the Oakland Raiders before an expected crowd of 65,000 at the Coliseum tonight.

Roman Gabriel, who sat out the Rams' 17-10 win over Dallas last weekend, will be back at quarterback for coach George Allen's club.

Gabriel, last year's most valuable player in the National Football League, is matched against Oakland quarterback Daryle Lamonica, the 1969 American Football League MVP.

The Raiders lost to Baltimore 33-21 in their exhibition opener but came back to trim Philadelphia 30-19 last weekend.

Gabriel ran for one touchdown and passed for another as Los Angeles started the season with a 30-17 victory against Cleveland. But the nine-year pro aggravated his right knee in the pregame warmups last Saturday night and watched from the sidelines as the Rams' No. 2 quarterback, Karl Sweetan, passed for a pair of touchdowns in Los Angeles' win over the Cowboys.

Raider coach John Madden has indicated he will use Ken Stabler, the team's No. 2 signal caller, in the second half against the Rams.

In five preseason quarters, Stabler, from Alabama, has hit 27 of 39 passes for six touchdowns.

For Los Angeles, rookie quarterback John Walton, who played last year with Indianapolis in the Continental Football League, and was that league's most valuable player, is expected to play the entire second quarter.

Although the Rams are favored to beat the former AFL club, now a member of the Western Division of the American Football Conference, they will be minus Larry Smith and Willie Ellison. Both have hamstring pulls.

Los Angeles has won five of its seven meetings against old AFL teams while Oakland has lost five of seven encounters against NFL clubs including its 1968 Super Bowl defeat to Green Bay.

Pender To Coach At West Point

WEST POINT, N.Y. (UPI) — Capt. Mel Pender, former Olympic gold medal sprinter, has been assigned to the U.S. Military Academy as assistant track and field coach.

At West Point, Pender will assist Army track coach Carleton Crowell with the cross country squad and the indoor and outdoor track teams.

The fomrer Atlanta, Ga., athlete competed in Olympic Games competition in Tokyo and Mexico City.

Marin Swimmers Compete In U.S. Championships

Robin Bachrach of the Dolphins of Marin and Denise Ham of the Marin Aquatic Club were scheduled to compete today in the 200-meter butterfly as the national AAU Senior National Swimming Championships went into their third day at the Los Angeles Swim Stadium.

Miss Bachrach, the only one of five Marin County swimmers entered in the meet who saw action yesterday, finished out of the running in the 400 individual medley. Her time of 5:33.20 was five seconds off her best clocking in the event.

In tommorow's final day of competition, Miss Bachrach and Miss Ham will swim in the 200 I.M. and Miss Ham will join MAC members Jo and Kathy Hislop and Ann Engel in the 400 freestyle relay.

Marin Team Ousted In Softball

NAPA — Defending champion Stornetta's Dairy of Napa gained revenge for an earlier tourney defeat by eliminating Sohner Tree Service of San Anselmo from the California State Softball Tournament last night, 4-0.

Gary Coleen pitched a no-hitter and Stornetta leftfielder Dave Rawlins broke open a scoreless tie with a two-out bases loaded single in the sixth inning.

The Dairymen iced the contest with another pair of runs in the seventh off losing hurler Walt Tyler.

The only two hard-hit balls by the San Anselmo team were Run Blume's line drive to the pitcher in the fourth and Carrol Stephens' long fly to left in the seventh.

Although playing with a make-shift lineup due to injuries which have plagued them in recent weeks, the Treemen came up with several sparkling plays in the early innings to bail Tyler out of trouble.

The line score:

Stornetta	000 002 2	4	7 0

900 Series For Silva

Walt Silva led all Marin County bowlers last week as he fired a 900 series at Country Club Bowl in San Rafael. The top woman was Val Heffelfinger who rolled a 603 series at Nave Lanes in Ignacio.

Rich McPherson led all juniors for the second straight week with a 591 at Country Club.

High scores for the week:

COUNTRY CLUB BOWL

Millionaire Billy Casper In Line For A Big Check

He Leads The Avco Tournament

SUTTON, Mass. (UPI)—Billy Casper is already one of the Internal Revenue Service's favorite people. And the way he's going, he'll be right up there with J. Paul Getty.

Mr. Casper, already classified as a millionaire from California, has put a hammer lock on the Avco Golf Classic, clearly pointing for the $32,000 first prize and the upper, upper bracket.

Casper ghosted away from the field at crowded Pleasant Valley Country Club Friday, firing a five-under 67 that promoted him from two strokes off the pace into a three-stroke lead.

The 39-year-old pro tour veteran from Bonita, Calif., actually enjoyed a four-stroke lead for most of the day but a late charge by fellow Californian Chuck Courtney slashed the lead to three as Casper bids for his fourth tournament win of the year and the 47th of his spectacular 15 year career.

Both Casper and the bespectacled Courtney credited their putting, the latter noting "that's the name of his game," as they took over from faltering opening day leader Dan Sikes.

Sikes, the Florida attorney whose first day 66 was matched by both Courtney and Jim Wiechers in a continuing assault on par Friday, faded to a two-over 74 in the second round and landed in a five-way tie for seventh place, five strokes off the rich Casper pace.

Other leaders included Juan "Antonio" Rodriguez Villa Vega Medina Figueroa de la Cruz Perez, better known as "Chi Chi", who was tied for third with Tom Weiskopf, Lou Graham and Jim at 139.

Then came Dan Sikes bracketed with R.H. Sikes, Art Wall, Bob Mitchell and Larry Ziegler, all at 140.

The pro assault on Pleasant Valley's par 72 layout meant that only the 81 entries shooting 147 or better, which is three over par, qualified for the final two days of televised play.

The most notable of the nonqualifiers was U.S. Open champion Tony Jacklin, who missed the "cut" by a single stroke after tangling with a water hazard on the seventh hole. The eight he scored on that par three hole gave Jacklin a six-over 78 for the day as he led a flock of tourists to the sidelines.

Giant's Remarkable Game

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Frank Reberger, who couldn't find his way around the first half of the season, now seems a solid fixture on the San Francisco Giants pitching staff.

"I don't think I was doing anything right earlier in the year," Reberger said Friday night after stopping the Chicago Cubs on six hits in a 5-1 victory. "I wasn't throwing right, I wasn't standing right on the mound and I didn't seem to be following through correctly."

Friday night, though, he put everything together, including a new, smoother delivery, to pitch his best game of the year and gain his fifth triumph in 10 decisions.

Reberger's fast ball, his meal ticket, exploded all over the plate and while he only struck out six batters he got most of them in key spots and gave the Giants bullpen still another day off.

"I have two fast balls," Reberger said. "One takes off and the other sinks. I go for the sinking one when I need a strikeout badly or a ground ball."

He used both types of fast balls effectively. In the fourth, when the Cubs scored their only run Reberger got out of a jam by getting Paul Popovich to ground back to him on a sinking fastball.

He used the same sinking fast ball in the fifth to strike out the dangerous Jim Hickman with the bases filled and two out and in the seventh he retired the equally dangerous Billy Williams on a fly ball—off a rising fast ball—with two on and two out.

"I guess it was my best game of the year," Reberger said, "because when I got into jams I was able to pitch my way out. If you can do that you are a good pitcher, and if you can't then you aren't."

Both catcher Dick Dietz and Manager Charlie Fox thought it was an outstanding effort.

"When you consider how bad he was earlier, this has to be a remarkable game," said Fox.

"He put it all together this time," said Dietz. "You couldn't have asked for a better effort. With his fast ball exploding all over the place he really had me on the move."

Five different Giants batted in a run with Hal Lanier's bloop single to center in the fourth driving in what proved to be the winner. A single by Willie Mays and a sacrifice fly by Dietz drove in two more runs in the fifth and a walk to Willie McCovey with the bases filled in the sixth drove in the final run.

A double by McCovey, a walk to Ken Henderson, a short single by Dietz and a groundout by Alan Gallagher netted the Giants, who now have won six of their last seven games, their first run in the second. The Cubs, who stranded 11 men, scored their only run in the fourth on a single by Williams and a double by Joe Pepitone.

Despite the loss, the Cubs remained in third place in the National League East, four games behind the front-running Pittsburgh Pirates. By winning, the Giants moved into third place in the NL West, but they are a distant 18 1-2 games behind Cincinnati.

Tip From Swimming Champ: Hall Says 'Stay Relaxed'

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—For Gary Hall, the big thing is staying relaxed. That's when he's at his best.

Hall, a 19-year-old Indiana University sophomore from Garden Grove, Calif., was nice and loose Friday night. And he went out and clipped nearly three seconds off his world record in the men's 400-meter individual medley.

"I kept calm and relaxed tonight," Hall explained. "I was too tensed up last night. You have to be keyed up for a race but it should be more from confidence than nervousness."

Beaten by Mike Stamm of San Diego, Calif., in the 200-meter backstroke Thursday night, Hall lowered his 400 individual medley record from 4:33.9 set lat year to 4:31.02.

Hall, who also holds the world record in the men's 200 individual medley, was clocked in a sizzling 59.74 seconds in his opening butterfly leg of the race.

After the bacgstroke leg, Hall's time was 2:07.45. He was 3:30.24 after the breaststroke before his final freestyle leg.

"I wanted to go out hard and I did," the blond Phillips 66-Long Beach, Calif., swimmer said. "The fly is my second best stroke and it really gave me a big lead on the record.

GOOD TURNS

"I didn't have much trouble at any time. My turns were very good."

Hall's record was the fifth world mark established in two days of competition at the Los Angeles Swim Stadium. The meet runs through Sunday night with 16 more events.

A silver medalist in the 400 individual medley at the Mexico City Olympics, Hall captured his eighth AAU outdoor title. He said he was looking forward to the Olympics at Munich in two years.

"I have a few plans for 1972," he smiled. "One thing I must do, though, is keep my mental attitude up. That's very important."

There were three other individual races Friday night with Mark Spitz, a triple world record holder from Santa Clara, Calif., getting his second crown in as many nights.

Spitz, 20, a junior at Indiana University, took the men's 200-meter freestyle in 1:54.60. That gave him eight national outdoor championships.

Holder of seven American records, Spitz explained why he failed to better the world mark of 1:54.3 he shares with Don Schollander.

IT WAS CHILLY

"I didn't get out as fast as I wanted to," the 6-foot-1, 170-pounder said. "It was a little chilly for me. I guess I should have gone after the record in the afternoon (in the qualifying) when it was warm."

A pair of 17-year-old seniors at Long Beach's Millikan High School, Susie Atwood and Ann Simmons, won the women's individual events.

Miss Atwood took the 400-meter individual medley in 5:07.32 for her second victory in two nights and fourth outdoor crown after her schoolmate won the 200 freestyle in 2:09.64.

Debbie Meyer, the triple gold medal winner at the 1968 Olympics who lowered her world record in the women's 400 freestyle Thursday night, finished third in the race won by Miss Atwood.

"I was surprised I was so far ahead of Debbie (12 yards) when I started the freestyle," Miss Atwood declared. "My legs were kind of tired in the last 50 meters. I'd have to say Ann's win inspired me tonight."

Miss Meyer, 18-year-old Sacramento, Calif., schoolgirl, was scratched from the 200 freestyle.

"I figured anyone who got in the finals could win after Debbie dropped out," Miss Simmons commented after her initial AAU outdoor win. "I was just swimming as hard as I could and praying that I would win."

Ex-49er Star Signs With L.A. Rams

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

FULLERTON, Calif — Clark Miller, a nine-year veteran of the National Football League who played with the San Francisco 49ers from 1961 through 1968, was signed as a free agent yesterday by the Los Angeles Rams. The 32-year-old Miller, a 6-5, 245 defensive end from Utah State, was picked by the Rams after receiving his release from the Washington Redskins.

Golf

DARIEN, Conn — Martha Wilkinson of Whittier, Calif., and Cynthia Hill of St. Petersburg, Fla., yesterday won semi-final matches in the 70th U.S. Women's Amateur Golf Tournament. Miss Wilkinson, 21, didn't lose a hole in defeating Shelly Hamlin of Fresno, Calif., 5 and 4, and Miss Hill, 22, rallied on the last two holes to beat June Bastanchuy of Whittier, two up.

LEAWOOD, Kan. — Shirley Englehorn and Kathy Whitworth both shot two-under-par 70s yesterday to take the first round lead in the $20,000 Southgate Invitational golf tournament.

TUALATIN, Ore. — Bob Crook, a 60-year-old bank manager from Longview, Wash., upset George Beechler, a mortician from Medford, Ore. 1up yesterday to win the Oregon Seniors golf championship at the Tualatin Country Club.

Bowling

WAUKEGAN, Ill. — Dave Soutar, a 10-year veteran from Gilroy, Calif., fire a 297 final game last night and took a commanding lead after two rounds in the $40,000 Waukegan Open Bowling Tounament. Soutar, winner of five Professional Bowlers' Association championships including last January's Las Vegas Open, averaged better than 231 pins per game as he posted a two round total of 2,780. Bobby Knipple of Long Beach, Calif., held down second place with 2,658 pins.

Football

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Andy Partin of Camden, S.C., a 17-year-old high school football player, died yesterday two days after collapsing during a workout at Maxton, N.C. Hospital officials did not comment on the death of Partin, a lineman for the Camden High School team in South Carolina. His team was in Maxton practicing for its first game.

Hockey

MONTREAL — Doctors said today it will be a few months before they can give an indication as to how far hockey player Michael Briere, who has been unconscious for the last three months following an automobile accident, will be able to recover. Officials at Notre Dame Hospital said yesterday his condition has remained stationary for the past few weeks. Briere was an outstanding rookie with the Pittsburgh Penguins last season.

Basketball

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Condors of the American Basketball Association announced yesterday they have placed guard Chico Vaughn and center Lonnie Lynn on waivers.

Is The Big Red Machine Folding? Manager Worried

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Is the Big Red Machine breaking down?

The guy who operates the machine, Sparky Anderson, thinks maybe it is, and he's getting worried.

The Big Red Machine, better known as the Cincinnati Reds, has been just a mediocre team since the All-Star break. Before that it was practically unbeatable. But with six weeks still to play in the season, things don't look as safe for the Reds as they did a few weeks ago.

The New York Mets, behind the seven-hit pitching of Jerry Koosman, beat the Reds, 4-1, Friday night and reduced the Reds' lead over the second place Los Angeles Dodgers in the National League's West Division to 10 games—but only eight in the lost column.

OWN CAUSE

The Dodgers helped their own cause—and the Mets'—by edging the Pittsburgh Pirates, 2-1, behind the seven-hit pitching of Claude Osteen. The Pirates now lead the Mets by only 1 1-2 games in the East division race.

Anderson doesn't feel the Reds are home free by a long shot, even though most critics have quietly conceded the division title to Cincinnati.

"I'm concerned," the Reds' manager said. "We can't continue playing this see-saw way we're playing now if we want to beat the Dodgers. (Walt) Alston is a great manager. He keeps his club at a top pitch, and he won't hand it to us. I'm not pleased with the way we're playing. It's not that we've had a letdown, but we just haven't played well."

The Reds, who were 62-26 at the All-Star break, have won only 20 of 38 games since. They still have five games left with the Dodgers.

Koosman held the Reds in complete check Friday night. The big lefthander, bothered by a sore arm earlier this year, didn't have his powerful fastball but he kept the Reds off stride with sharp control and an assortment of curves.

GOOD VELOCITY

"I wasn't overpowering and I didn't challenge the hitters, but I kept the ball where I wanted it. I maintained good velocity," said Koosman.

The Mets took advantage of the wildness of Reds' starter Tony Cloninger to score two big runs in the second inning. Cloninger walked Bud Harrelson and Wayne Garrett with the bases loaded to force home two runs and the Mets took charge from there. Harrelson, who entered the game tied with Chicago's Don Kessinger for most consecutive errorless games played at shortstop (54), missed a chance to set the record when he erred on the first play of the game. He later committed another error which allowed the Reds to score their only run of the game.

Osteen continued his mastery over the Pirates as he beat them for the fourth straight time this season. The stylish lefthander wasn't quite as stingy as he has been in the past, however, as he allowed them a run—the first the Pirates have scored off him in 46 innings.

OTHER GAMES

In other NL games, San Francisco beat Chicago, 5-1; St. Louis walloped San Diego, 14-8; Montreal edged Atlanta, 6-4; and Houston beat Philadelphia 9-1 in the nightcap of a doubleheader after losing the opener, 9-3.

Baltimore blanked California, 5-0, as Dave McNally became the majors first 19-game winner; Cleveland beat Oakland, 6-3; Minnesota edged Washington, 4-3; Kansas City nipped Boston, 2-1, in 12 innings; New York defeated Chicago, 4-2; and Detroit topped Milwaukee, 6-4, in American League action.

An Astounding Victory For Gretel

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI)—Valiant, which was beaten Friday by Intrepid for its first loss in the U.S. America's Cup final trials, met Heritage today in a race in which a loss might eliminate Heritage.

Australia's Fretel II, which beat France Friday in a peculiar race which opened their international qualifying series, the first ever held, and France had the day off after France requested a "lay" day. They meet again Monday in the second race of their best of seven series.

Gretel beat France by an astounding six minutes, 30 seconds after France had led at the first five marks although never by much. The wind was only eight knots when the two twelve-meters started, and died to a calm several times during the race, leaving the two yachts helplessly floundering.

FRESH BREEZE

But the breeze finally freshened to eight knots again and at the final turn skipper Jim Hardy of Gretel buffed France's 62-year-old Swiss skipper, Louis Noverraz, into thinking that Gretel would go inside. To prevent this, Noverraz turned too tight, lost the wind and stopped his boat.

"We went through him and away," said Hardy. "Then we got better wind than he did and kept going."

Hardy said that aside from that error Noverraz had outsailed him for much of the race.

The lack of wind cut Friday's Intrepid-Valiant race to three legs, when it was called off with Intrepid 23 seconds in the lead. It was declared an official race, although it was only 10.8 miles rather than the regulation 24.3.

3-1 RECORDS

Each has now won three and lost one (each beat the other) and Heritage has not beaten either. Should Heritage, built and skippered by Charles Morgan of St.Petersburg, Fla., lose again today to Valiant, skippered by Bill McCullough of Riverside, Conn., it be excused from further competition by the New York Yacht Club selection Committee. There is no specific duration of the U.S. trials—the Selection Committee simply decides when yachts are eliminated.

Bout Triumphs In Semi-Pro

BRIDGETON, N.J. (UPI)—Although giving up on his knuckleball after three innings, pitcher-author Jim Bouton won his semi-pro debut Friday night, pitching Pat Pavers of Trenton to a 7-5 victory over the Washington, D.C. Black Sox.

Bouton, who retired from professional baseball last week, was touched for 13 hits, including a homer, in the nine-inning game but was able to hold the defending tournament champions scoreless over the final three innings. He struck out 10 batters.

ALMANAC

Today is Saturday, Aug. 22, the 234th day of 1970 with 131 to follow.

The moon is between its full phase and last quarter. The morning stars are Mars and Saturn. The evening stars are Mercury, Venus and Jupiter.

On this day in history:

In 1851 the U.S. yacht, America, defeated a number of British ships off Cowes, England, to win a silver trophy. It still carries the title "The America's Cup."

In 1911 the Mona Lisa was stolen from the Louvre Museum in Paris. It was recovered Dec. 10.

In 1941 Nazi troops advanced to the outskirts of Leningrad in Russia during World War II.

In 1968 Pope Paul received a hearty welcome in Bogota, Colombia. It was the first visit to Latin America by a Roman Catholic pontiff.

A thought for the day: Bret Harte said, "One big vice in a man is apt to keep out a great many smaller ones."

Guilty Verdict In Taking $20

Two East Bay men, accused of taking a Little League fund-raising jar containing $20 from a Sausalito restaurant Wednesday night, were found guilty by Municipal Judge Peter Allen Smith.

Morris Dashutes, 40, and Peter Joseph Dsmond, 33, of Oakland, had pleaded not guilty to the misdemeanor count, and waived jury trial, resting their case on the police report.

Judge Smith set Sept. 25 for reading of probation reports and sentencing.

HOW TO PLAY

Bridge Errors Not Publicized But Even Experts Can Fumble

When a baseball player catches a ball in the outfield with his skull, you are sure to read about it in all the papers. When a bridge player does something equally inept, he is mortally offended at any columnist who writes a word about it. So I won't say who played today's hand, but I will mention that it was a well known American player, competing in the world championship pair contest in Stockholm a few weeks ago.

OWED GRATITUDE

Declarer won the first trick in dummy with the ace of spades and should have bowed three times to the West in gratitude for the neutral lead. South led the deuce of diamonds to the king and returned a heart to try a finesse with the queen. East dropped the ten, and now the slam was on ice.

Declarer could continue with the ace and jack of hearts to force out the king, and could get to dummy with the queen of diamonds to take the nine of hearts and then the last two hearts. He would make five hearts, two spades, four diamonds and the ace of clubs.

REPEATS FINESSE

If South had played the hand in that way, you might be reading about it now, but the first paragraph of this story would be different. South had the slam in his grasp, but he bobbled it.

South led a diamond to the jack and led another heart to repeat the finesse, hoping that East had falsecarded with 10-x of hearts. The second finesse worked, but now South had to go ahead with the hearts and give West the king. West returned the king of clubs, and South could no longer make his slam.

OUT OF LUCK

If South led a diamond to dummy's queen, he could take the hearts but would then wind up with two club losers in the dummy and no way to get to his hand. If South took his own diamonds, he would wind up with one losing club and no way to get to dummy for the established hearts.

There's probably a moral in this story, but I'll let the reader supply it.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two spades.

You count 5 points in high cards and 3 points for the singleton, easily enough for a raise when you have four-card support for his suit.

Contract Awarded

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—The state Public Works Department Friday awarded a $110,534 contract to Ghilotti Bros., Inc., San Rafael, for widening a half mile of Novato Boulevard near Novato.

SERVING ALL OF MARIN COUNTY

28 EDITORIAL PAGE San Rafael, Calif.

The Editor's Notebook

We, Too, Have A Stake In Survival Of Big Cities

When 1970 census figures are finally completed and formalized, they will underscore one thing we already know.

Big cities, like San Francisco, are losing population while suburbs, like Marin and Southern Sonoma counties, are growing rapidly.

To say that the central cities are "in trouble" has become trite. Everyone must have observed by now what is happening. White collar families are moving to the suburbs, leaving behind the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minority groups.

"DETERIORATION AND decay of the inner city," it is called. It is a nation-wide affliction.

The rising incidence of crime on big city streets and riotous outbursts are symptoms of the affliction. Health department and welfare department statistics as well as crime reports measure the dimensions of the problem.

As has been observed in this space previously, the inner city's problems are so immense that a city cannot finance solution by itself. Those of us in the suburbs must help. We have a stake in the survival of the city, too.

IRRITATING AS WAS Mayor Alioto's proposal for a commuter tax, it was not without basis in need. Now San Francisco proposes to collect a payroll tax, across the board. This too, will be most unpopular but again not without a basis in need.

Black leaders like Martin Luther King and Whitney Young Jr. have long since advocated pumping billions of federal funds into the fight to solve the big cities' problems. They have been forceful in calling for an end to spending for the Vietnam War so as to divert those massive funds into the fight to save our cities.

Now there is beginning to rise doubt in some quarters that the problem can be solved at all, within the cities.

In an editorial published earlier this month, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, for example, foresees that the solution may lie more in the suburbs than in the inner city,

PROVIDING MORE low rent public housing projects in big cities would simply continue the concentration of the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minorities there without any major change aside from the roofs over their heads.

The solution may have to be, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch indicates, in dispersing the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minorities to the suburbs.

In a sense, zoning laws have been a weapon of the "haves" against the "have-nots."

We see this in Marin where it certainly was not the intent of promulgators of zoning laws but has nonetheless been the result of their efforts.

To avoid "slums," zoning requires larger and larger lots, more and better subdivision improvements like wider streets and sidewalks — all of which adds to the ultimate price which the buyer must pay for a home.

It has been a long time since Marin has seen subdivision where homes are priced for the workingman's pocketbook. Increasingly, Marin working people have found it expedient to move to Southern Sonoma County where housing costs are more reasonable.

POPULATION PROJECTIONS indicate that even if cities are completely rehabilitated, they will not be able to absorb future growth. Some way must be found to open suburban areas to lower income areas.

During the 1970's we probably can expect pressures for suburban areas like Marin to reexamine zoning ordinances with a view to zoning low income housing along with medium and high income housing within our immediate area.

IT IS A GOOD bet that the federal government will use its fiscal stick and carrot to encourage the likes of Marin to provide housing for the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minorities in an overhaul of land use plans.

This will be a hard bite to swallow for some, but if the mounting sociological problems of our cities are to be solved, we have no choice but to take our medicine.

—Jack Craemer

Pollution

Polluting our environment is a sinful act and conserving it is a moral duty, so say theologians of six major Protestant denominations in announcing that their church bodies will finance a nationwide effort to promote environmental stewardship.

These churchmen say that each generation is responsible before God to guard the earth's resources as part of our heritage to succeeding generations.

Any further comment on our part would be presumptious. We could not agree more.

Sloppy Parking

It's a small matter to be sure, but nevertheless disconcerting to find some parking hog who takes up two parking spaces because of sloppy driving.

At the Civic Center, for example, where parking spaces are at a premium, you occasionally find a vehicle straddled over the line, thus effectively blocking two spaces.

The idea is to put the car between the white lines, not over it.

Bouquets And Brickbats

A BOUQUET to San Francisco-Oakland Helicopter Airlines for reconsidering an earlier decision and deciding instead to continue service to and from Marin.

A BOUQUET to the Petaluma Chamber of Commerce for backing an anti-shoplifting campaign. Shoplifting is a significant cost of doing business these days — paid for by buyers of merchandise. If shoplifting can be appreciably reduced, consumers will benefit.

A BOUQUET to Airport Limousine Service of Sausalito for starting regular trips from Marin to San Francisco International Airport and return. We hope this service enjoys the patronage it deserves.

A BOUQUET to County Fire Chief Louis J. Bloom for ordering an unauthorized fence removed — to reopen public access to the top of Mount Tamalpais.

A BOUQUET to the Kidney Foundation of Northern California which sponsored a benefit auto show at Strawberry Town and Country Village last week. We hope the event was successful in raising enough money to provide the needed kidney machine at Marin General Hospital.

BOUQUETS to all involved in the negotiations which averted a strike of Petaluma city police.

A BOUQUET to Novato Rotary Club for staging a pancake breakfast to benefit the two tot lots recently opened in Novato.

BOUQUETS to Sharon Walsh of San Rafael for winning national and world-wide tennis honors.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Bagley's Stand —'It Figures'

So Bill Bagley considers the Wakefield anti-busing bill to be "danmable, biased" (I-J, Aug. 17). It figures.

Bagley himself introduced two years ago an unsuccessful bill to promote busing. Now he is actively working for State Superintendent of Schools candidate Wilson Riles, whose stand on busing is ambiguous to say the least — just like his stand against "tax trap" Prop. 8 until just before the June election, when he "reluctantly" endorsed it.

Is Riles to be trusted when he says he's against busing? He lied about being considered for one of the top HEW posts, according to Bob Finch. He supported Angela Davis as a teacher, according to an I-J story last April 10.

I think we can say goodbye to neighborhood schools if Bill Bagley's Wilson Riles is elected.

DDT Outburst Is Emotional

Carol Childs' DDT outburst (I-J, Aug. 17) is typical of the "Don't - Confuse - Me - With - The - Facts" emotionalism of the bumper-strip ecologists.

Sure, it was embarassing for the great reconservationist organization, the Audubon Society, to discover that bird populations had increased instead of decreased since the advent of DDT. How dare they! — in defiance of the High Priestess of Nature, Rachel Carson? But then it was a simple trick on the part of her successor, Frank Graham, to announce that the Audubon Society didn't know how to count birds after all . . .

In their zealous drive to "Ban DDT" some of our popular ecologists, on learning that data about California Golden Eagles and Red Tailed Hawks show an actual increase in shell thickness, now claim the DDT-thickened shells make it hard for baby birds to peck their way out!

Miss Child's hopes for "biological controls" are shared by many archair nature lovers, but, fortunately for the general population of the world, not by authorities in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the Food and Drug Administration, or the United Nations' FAO and WHO. We can depend on biological controls for less than three per cent of our food production and virtually none of our vector protection. Like it or not, the facts are that for 97 per cent of our food supplies and nearly 100 per cent of our vector-associated health protection, we must depend on modern agricultural chemicals.

There are more than 10,000 harmful species of insects in this world, most of which would love to get at Miss Childs and her food. Maybe she should teach them to read and supply each with a copy of Mr. Graham's book?

Many Painters Shut Span Lanes

When the Richmond-San Rafael bridge was originally constructed, I suspected that the real purpose of the bridge was to provide lifetime employment for the painters, with cars and trucks merely being tolerated to pay their salaries. Recent developments have tended to confirm this suspicion, since there is now sufficient traffic to support enough painting crews to justify closing off one full lane each way.

If the traffic continues to increase at its present rate, there will shortly be enough revenue to hire another set of painting crews so that both side lanes each way can be blocked off. Of course, all the traffic will be funneled into the center lanes and will travel at the speed of the slowest car or truck—but this is no worse than most freeways at peak times.

The problem would appear to become critical when revenues are sufficient to justify additional crews, who obviously will want to use the center lanes. All is not lost, however. The bridge people can set up lights and allow traffic to flow during lunch hours, coffee breaks, relief stops, etc. Then, too, there are nights, weekends, an increasing number of holidays, and various other unscheduled periods when the people can use the bridge, Also, as the working hours are shortened, more public time becomes available.

Thus, I visualize that the situation may be tightest in another five to ten years. After that, the time spent by the painters at work will drop off until eventually they can merely draw their paychecks and go home, leaving the bridge to the commuters — as it was in the beginning.

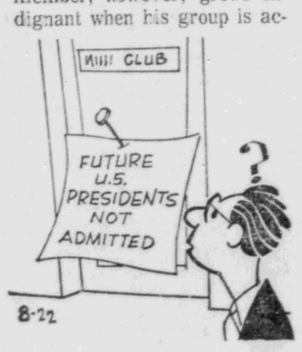
TRY AND STOP ME

By BENNETT CERF

HARVARD BOASTS a club that's so exclusive that two future presidents of the United States were blackballed. One member, however, grows indignant when his group is accused of being undemocratic. "To prove my point," he points out angrily, "the year I rowed on the varsity crew, I knew the names of all but the three men up front."



A NEWLY ELECTED Senator came home from his freshman year in Washington with views that were radically different than the ones proclaimed in his campaign. A friend who had previously disagreed vehemently with his opinions told him, "I'm certainly glad that a long last you appear to have been the light." "I didn't see the light," admitted the Senator, "I felt the heat."

MARQUIS CHILDS

Public Quarrel Between Israel, Washington Could Be Perilous

WASHINGTON — The perils of diplomacy by public charge and counter-charge are painfully evident in the dispute over Israel's claim that Egypt violated the cease-fire hours after it was entered into. During one of his many visits to the State Department Israeli Ambassador Yitzhak Rabin was told pointedly of one peril.

Public opinion in this country will turn against Israel in the belief that the charges repeatedly made in public are an attempt to sabotage the peace talks. The Nixon Administration, it was stressed, puts the highest importance on the Middle East peace initiative, and with the conviction that American opinion supports the effort to check the drift toward war.

If it served no other end, the warning further inflamed the bitter and angry feeling that has set most Israelis against the United States or, at any rate, against the administration in Washington. Since the United States is Israel's only real friend in the world, this is a dramatic shift with disturbing implications for the immediate future. After all, the Nixon Administration will be in power for two years more and officials in the state department and the White House wrestling with the cease-fire feel a reciprocal irritation and resentment ocer the public airing in Tel Aviv of Israel's grieveances.

Nothing like this festering hostility has occurred since the abortive war of 1956. Then another Republican administration took stern measures to compel Israeli forces to stop short of advancing on Cairo and overthrowing Gamal Abdel Nasser. They were quite capable of doing just that even though British-French support by sea and air had fallen short of the pledged backing.

Although at the climactic moment of that Middle East crisis Secretary of State John Foster Dulles had undergone his first cancer operation, it was his policy that prevailed. The Ambassador to the United Nations, Henry Cabot Lodge, repeatedly called not only for a halt but a withdrawal. With the Soviet Union taking the same position, there was the unique spectacle of the two super powers standing together in the world forum.

The bitterness growing out of that confrontation, with Israel accepting the U.S. dictum and the British and the French humiliated, persisted for a long time. It was only with the advent of a Democratic administration in 1961 and Lyndon Johnson's later approval of the sale of advanced weapons, notably the supersonic Phantom fighter-bomber plane, that the close relationship of the past was revived. That relationship dated from an earlier Democratic President, Harry S. Truman, who took instant action to recognize the infant state of Israel when it came into being.

Something new has been added since 1956, putting the present strain between Washington and Tel Aviv in a new light. The Soviet Union has established a major military presence in the Mediterranean.

An extensive fleet is served by bases in Egypt and elsewhere in the area. This has been a steady buildup posed against the American Sixth Fleet that was once not only the largest but virtually the only important force in the Mediterranean. The introduction of Soviet technicians and pilots to help man Egyptian defenses was one more step to try to insure the Nasser regime from collapse and to prevent bombing in Egypt's interior zone.

The story is told of one of the far-out Israeli hawks who challenged an American military visitor to Tel Aviv to say why the Soviets had been permitted to establish this power base. And why, he went on, don't you just order them out? If they refuse, you know what you can do. To the visitor this seemed a slightly hazardous proposal, suggesting that nuclear war would be merely one incidental result of forcing the Soviets out of the Mediterranean.

But it does raise a question for which there is really no answer. Could anything have been done to prevent this impressive buildup?

ART BUCHWALD

It's The Taxis That Point To Dream World Of Television Land

I was talking the other day with a friend and we got around to the question of what was wrong with television. We both came to the conclusion that everyone on TV was being presented in a false light, and the public was being cheated out of seeing situation as they really are. For example, on the lawyer shows "Perry Mason" and "The Defenders," no one ever asks for a fee. There is never any discussion of money on these programs and people are under the impression that any lawyer will defend you for the love of it.

But in real life this is what would happen: A woman comes into Perry Mason's office. She says, "My son has been accused of a crime, but I know he didn't do it."

PERRY IN REAL life would say, "Wait a minute, madam. Befor you go any further, I'll have to ask for a retainer."

"He's innocent," the lady says. "You've got to defend him."

"How much can you afford? Legal costs are expensive. If he pleads guilty, I'll make a deal with the district attorney and save you the expense of a long, drawn-out jury trial."

"But he wants to plead not guilty."

"Big deal," says Perry. "They'll probably hang him anyway and it will still cost you $5,000."

"I GUESS YOU'RE right," the woman says. "Plead him guilty. He's always getting into trouble, anyway."

"That will be $500 now and $500 at the start of the trial. If there are any other expenses, I'll let you know."

Or let's take "Dr. Kildare." What kind of guy would Dr. Kildare be if he weren't on television? Perhaps something like this:

"Dr. Kildare," an elderly man says, "I have a pain in my side."

"I don't know anything about pains in people's sides. I'll send you to a specialist, Dr. Renfrow."

"But besides my side, my left leg hurts."

"Why didn't you say so in the first place? Dr. Lavine is the best leg man in town. Tell him I sent you."

"And it hurts when I breathe."

"YOU NEED A good lung man. After you see Dr. Lavine about your leg, go over and see Dr. Ordman about your chest. I'll write down the address here."

"I can't read your handwriting," the old man says.

"Eye trouble, too? You better see Dr. Feldman, the eye, ear, nose and throat man."

"Thank you very much, Dr. Kildare."

"Don't mention it. That will be $10."

What about Dr. Ben Casey, if there were such a person in real life?

A NURSE RUSHES in. "Dr. Casey, there's been a terrible skiing accident. They want you in the operation room right away."

Casey puts on a mask, sterilizes his arms, walks over to the table.

"Has this man signed a release that I'm not responsible if the operation doesn't come off?"

"No, sir. He was brought in unconscious."

"Well, I'm not operating until someone signs a release. Do you think I'm going to be sued for malpractice?"

The final thing to make one suspect television of not being true-to-life is that taxis are always plentiful on TV and ready to pursue the heavy.

Mysterious Albania's Cocoon Cracking

By RICHARD M. SUDHALTER

BELGRADE (UPI)—The cocoon of isolation surrounding Albania, the least-understood nation in Europe, at last appears to be breaking. The abiding political question now for both East and West is why.

Tirana, the capital of the lone European ally of Communist China, has put out a series of dilpomatic feelers in recent months clearly aimed at thawing relations on a wide variety of fronts.

It has exchanged ambassadors with Scandinavian countries and made open overtures to "revisionist" Yugoslavia next door. It has negotiated cultural and technical exchanges with Egypt and Turkey and increased trade with Romania.

Most surprising of all was Albania's signing in June of a trade agreement with Greece, with which it is still technically at war. A Greek foreign ministry spokesman went as far this month as to say he thought the accord ultimately could lead to "the start of eventual diplomatic relations."

Relations or no, the trade pact is an unprecedented Albanian gesture toward Greece, a key Atlantic Alliance member whose leaders are regularly decried throughout the Communist world as "a fascist military clique." It is also a landmark on what appears to be Albania's path to a new concept of its role in the international political picture.

Albania, a mountainous land of only two million inhabitants, is about the size of Vermont and Rhode Island combined. It borders the Adriatic across from the heel of the Italian boot, between Yugoslavia and Greece.

Its borders remain closed to all but a steady trickle of foreign visitors who are closely supervised during their stays. Albania participates in no regular diplomatic or political activity in Europe.

Once a Warsaw Pact member, it began a drift out of the Soviet orbit in the 1950s which culminated in a break with the alliance in 1968.

Since then Tirana has strengthened its political and military ties with China, though periodic reports of Chinese missiles and other weapons systems in Albania have never been verified.

East European diplomats in Belgrade said recent Albanian moves appear to indicate realization in Tirana that close ties with Peking —even ideological ones—do not imply identical political needs or even attitudes.

"It would be wrong to assume that Albania and China have completely similar views concerning world problems," the Zagreb newspaper Vjesnik commented April 25. "On the contrary, there have existed important differences (between them) and individual points of view on certain international issues. Internal developments in Albania, moreover, are certainly no imitation of Chinese socialism."

Accordingly, Albania has developed a highly individual approach to its relations with neighboring Greece and Yugoslavia, as well as with Bulgaria and Romania.

Communist Party leader Enver Hoxha followed up a series of friendly newspaper articles by praising "good neighborly relations" with Yugoslavia in a May 30 speech in Bajram Curry, near the Yugoslav border.

His remarks followed only a week after a decision by the Yugoslav party presidium to step up development of Kosovo, the largely Albanian-populated south Yugoslav province bordering Albania. He took note—another unprecedented move—of the fact Albanians in Kosovo are being granted more and more rights by the Belgrade government.

Diplomats warned, however, that the influence of Chinese policy on Albanian thinking, while far from absolute, cannot be underplayed. They recalled Peking took the lead in thawing out its international diplomatic relations, sending back to their posts many ambassadors pulled home during China's "cultural revolution" of the 1960s.

Yugoslavia's first ambassador to Peking in 12 years arrived in the Chinese capital in May. Peking's envoy is expected in Belgrade within the next few weeks.

Albanian-Yugoslav relations remain at legation-level.

The reason or reasons for the Chinese and Albanian thaws remain subjects for discussion, at least for the moment. But most diplomats here advise close study of the Sino-Soviet dispute for possible clues.

"Both the Chinese and the Albanians fear the Soviet Union," one senior Western diplomat said recently. "For them, good relations these days could mean more sympathy for their side of things—and possibly more support."

The Kremlin periodically reaffirms its declared readiness to restore good relations with its ex-Warsaw pact ally on the south Adriatic despite what it terms "intrigues by hostile forces"—presumably the Chinese.

But for Moscow radio, the Graeco-Albanian trade pact in June "meets the wishes of official circles in the USA for paving the path for American penetration into Albania through their links with the Greek Fascist junta."

From all indications, Albania's diplomatic "new look" has already begun to yield results. Yugoslav president Tito, apparently taking Hoxha's cue, told a recent rally in Zabljak, south Yugoslavia, "We have no other interests than good relations as far as Albania is concerned. It has always been our wish to make our relations as good as possible. True, our systems are different—but this should not be a reason for poor relations on the frontiers."

Observers agreed the 78-year-old president's speech was Yugoslavia's warmest nod yet in Albania's direction.

"It's up to Tirana now," the Western diplomat said. "And I've got a hunch the Albanians will accept the invitation."

OPENING UP? — Albania, a mountainous land of only two million inhabitants, which borders on the Adriatic, has been sending out diplomatic and trade feelers to other nations. Albania has been strengthening its political and military ties with Communist China since breaking with the Warsaw pact alliance in 1968. (UPI Telephoto map)

NIXON AND YOUTH

Team Maps Key Conference Items

By SUSAN McCABE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House Conference on Youth which will meet here next February may be the Nixon administration's "last chance" to establish some kind or rapport with young people who are disenchanted with their government and its policies, a White House intern said today.

John Runyan, 21, of Akron, Ohio, a Harvard senior who spent the summer working in Washington, said in an interview that he foresees "great trouble ahead" unless some bridges of mutual understanding are quickly constructed between government and youth.

Helping to prepare for the forthcoming youth conference was Runyan's primary assignment as a White House intern. He was part of a team collecting information on the ideas and opinions of young people, interviewing college students, soldiers, job holders and others in an attempt to get an overall picture of the views of the 14 to 24 age group.

He said the February conference will deal with 10 topics, chosen by young people as issues of prime concern to them.

They are: selective service; drugs; education; environmental pollution; minority relations; poverty; legal rights and justice; foreign relations; economy and employment; and values, ethics and culture.

Each subjevt will be examined by a 12-member team including four adults and eight young people of varying background and education. The task forces will suggest possible courses of action in each area.

The youth conference was originally scheduled for next June but the administration has moved it up to late February, indicating President Nixon's recognition of the pressing necessity of opening a dialogue with young people.

Runyan said he's encouraged by the fact that "the administration has promised to respond to the recommendations of the Conference."

"If the Conference can demonstrate it will be different, the kids might buy it," he said, adding that by "different" he meant the government would really "listen and respond to the Conferences' recommendations."

Runyan said the present attitude of most college students towards the administration tends to be suspicious, and this distrust can be overcome only by action, not promises.

"They're not going to believe it until it happens," he said.

Runyan said that despite their urgent desire for change, 80 to 90 per cent of the college students are opposed to any attempt to achieve it through violence.

"Most students think the kids who want to burn down buildings and start riots are crazy," he said.

"The great majority of students don't want to fight; they just want to be listened to."

Runyan said he hopes that the White House Conference, by airing the views of youth, also will awaken the "silent majority" to a greater concern for national problems. "If one segment of the population expresses an active concern, the great silent portions of the country may decide to become vocal too."

Asserting youth's right to be heard on national problems, he noted that in "Walden," Henry David Thoreau said "Age is not better, hardly so well qualified for an instructor as youth, for it has not profited so much as it has lost."

Applying Thoreau's precept to today's society, Runyan argued that the older generation has not profited so much materially as it has lost idealistically.

With age often comes disillusionment and apathy, he said, and people accept a difficult "reality." They adopt a "no, this is not the best of worlds but there's nothing I can do to change it" attitude.

By contrast, he said, young people today are refusing to accept their parents' "reality." Their philosophy is, "if this is not the best world possible, then let's change it."

Haight-Ashbury Business Is Bad—Even For Pushers

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Outside a shuttered coffee shop in the Haight-Ashbury District, a sign reads: "Brother Juniper's Inn is now closed. May the love, light and life descend upon you from the great Christos."

That sums up the situation in the disaster area that three years ago was the scene of the Flower Children's Summer of Love.

Where hundreds of thousands of American youth came to seek peace, love and the hippie life style, every third shop is boarded up and empty. A penciled note behind the grate of one psychedelic store simply states: "Closed forever."

Now that a driver can park any place, the Police Department has restored two-way traffic to Haight Street, once jammed bumper-to-bumper.

The only hip-oriented shop surviving from three-dozen in 1967 is the Phoenix, named for the bird that rose alive from the ashes.

Its owner, Bob Stubbs, says the district still contains many hippies because of low rents but they don't walk Haight Street much anymore. It can be dangerous.

Knots of hard-eyed drug pushers and motorcycle toughs stand on the corners waiting for action. Stubbs says "police hassling" also continues.

His own store occasionally is "ripped off" by thieves who grab an armload of merchandise and run. That's a main reason, along with the disappearance of tourists, for the exodus of hippie businessmen.

"The hippie invasion murdered us old-timers," said Mendel Herscowitz, a paint store operator and president of the Haight Street Merchants Association. Customers of established businesses stopped coming, Herscowitz said, adding, "I stayed alive because I'm flexible."

He explained business is so bad even the drug pushers "are dying on their feet, too. The white suburban kids don't have to come here to buy dope. They get it in their schools."

"Violent crime still is very high, but it is dropping because the bad boys are losing their victims," police lieutenant George Sully said.

The Haight-Ashbury Medical Clinic is mostly concerned these days with heroin addicts, a switch from youths on bad LSD trips in 1967-68 and the earlier methedrine "speed freaks."

As more youths use heroin as "a downer" for calming methedrine experiences, Dr. George Gay at the clinic said, heroin clinic sees 50 addicts each afternoon.

In a sense, the addicts dropouts from the Hippie culture in whose communes, now located in other parts of San Francisco and in rural areas, hard drugs usually are strictly forbidden.

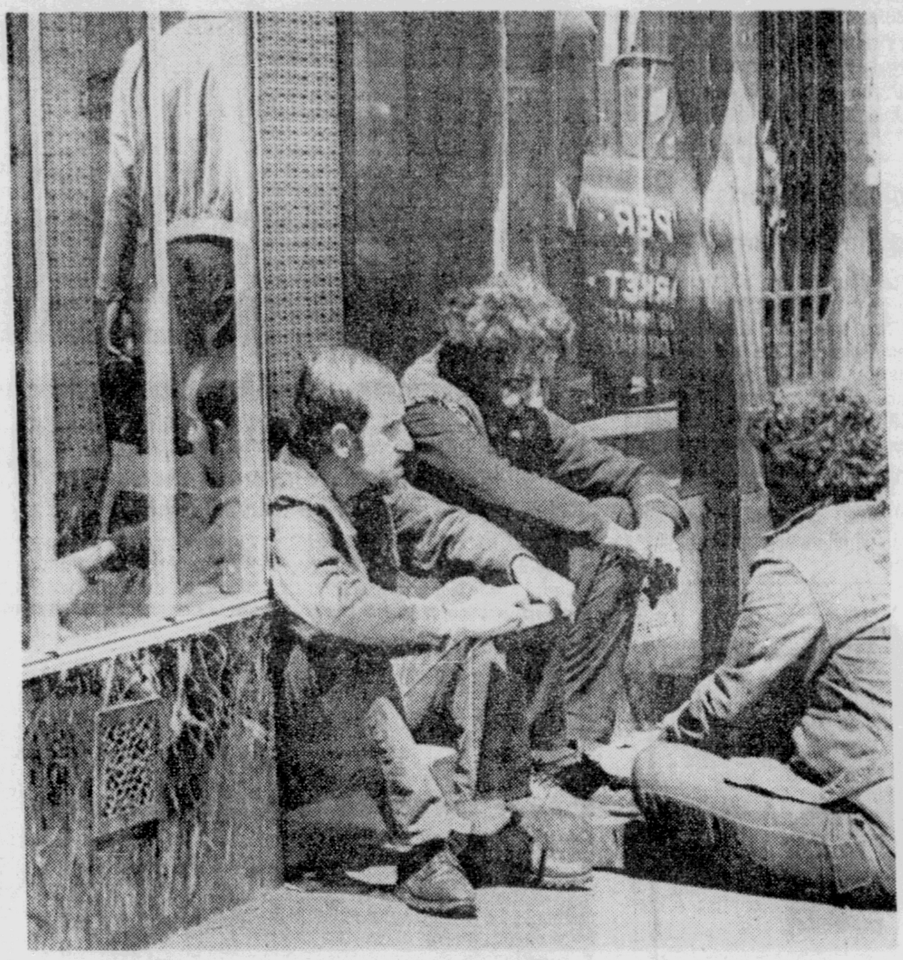
Some of the hippie institutions of 1967 remain and quietly flourish, such as Switchboard, a communications center. The Food Conspiracy commune buys food wholesale and sells it at cost to 20 other communes. The Kauliflower commune publishes a newspaper for commune members and the Good Earth publishes a newspaper for the general public.

But for hippies he Haight-Ashbury District is dead, a fate perhaps the hippies themselves foresaw not too long after the Human Be-in in Golden Gate Park Jan. 14, 1967, in which a crowd of 15,000 signaled the scope of the new phenomenon.

In October, after the 1967 Summer of Love, they staged a funeral march with a 20-foot coffin on Haight Street, proclaiming "the death of the hippie."

They meant death of the mass media's name, hippie, which they loathed. They also meant something was going wrong in the district.

And it his.



DYING OUT — The weighty events of the world, or something, are discussed by this trio passing the time of day in the Haight-Ashbury district of San Francisco. Three years ago this was the scene of the Flower Children's Summer of Love. Today every third shop is boarded up. (UPI Telephoto)

Behind The News

Independent-Journal, 29 Saturday, August 22, 1970

By United Press International

The rolling Atlantic, graveyard for stripe-sailed Viking warships,the Titanic and torpedoed warships and merchant vessels, became the catchbasin for two rusting hulks scuttled to deposit their cargoes of nerve gas and explosives with the relics of ancient and modern mariners.

The result of both operations hung with the weight of an albatross around the neck of the Navy.

The Lebaron Russell Briggs carrying 67 tons of obsolete but toxic nerve gas sealed in 418 concrete and steel vaults, was intended to slip slowly under the waves 282 miles east of the Florida coast and to descend quietly through 16,000 feet of water where it later could be traced to determine gas leakage.

Instead, the Navy virtually lost track of the old ship Tuesday as it plummeted to the bottom in eight minutes and hit the seabed at 25 miles an hour, destroying the sound equipment needed for future surviellance.

The unexpected violent descent also caused the failure of experiments designed to determine if any gas had burst from the scuttled hulk. Of 10 bottles which should have bobbed to the surface with their water samples, four popped up prematurely and the others never made it.

Navy experts expressed disappointment but said it did not matter whether the experiments failed because the threat to human life was nonexistent

There also were complications in a second scuttling.

Aboard the aged liberty ship David Hughes, some of the 5,000 tons of explosives packed into its hulk detonated Thursday after it hit bottom in 7,200 feet of water 118 miles due east of Cape May, N.J.

Around The World, Around The Clock:

JERUSALEM—Israel, accepting the partial compliance by the United States with its charges Egypt set up missile bases within 30 miles of the Suez Canal shortly after the Mideast ceasefire, agreed to open American-inspired peace negotiations with Egypt and Jordan.

PUERTO VALLARTA, Mexico—President Nixon returned with his wife for 28 hours to the country where they had spent their honeymoon.

OMAHA, Neb.—An Omaha policeman was killed and seven other persons were injured after a bomb in a suitcase exploded in a vacant house near the predominantly Negro north side.

WASHINGTON—The Senate, on a 77-16 vote, easily overrode President Nixon's veto of the $4.4 billion education bill.

U.S. Taxpayers Tired Of Schools' Costs

By JOAN HANAUER

U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The cost of public education in the United States is going up and the willingness of the taxpayer to foot the bill is going down.

The result is an increasing number of school districts strapped for funds, on austerity budgets or — in some cases — actually shutting school doors on their pupils.

The areas hardest hit are not the big city ghetto schools but those in suburban and rural areas where the taxpayers vote on school budgets and construction bonds. Increasingly they are voting no.

A nationwide survey by UPI to discover how the public schools stand on the eve of the new term in September, came up with these examples:

In Michigan, there districts have asked the state Board of Education to allow them to hold less than full-day classes because of financial troubles stemming from voter refusal to approve tax proposals that would pay operating costs. They include Lansing, fourth largest city in the state; Lincoln Park.

In Ohio, one school district will be unable to open until late fall because voters failed to approve sufficient operating levies.

In Missouri, voters in suburban Kirkwood in St. Louis County have stubbornly turned down a descending scale of tax hikes five times this year and will vote Sept. 1 on retaining the present tax scale. Schools Superintendent W. S. Shannon called operating on the old tax rate "a situation we can live with, but not one which will contribute to continued improvement of our schools."

In St. Charles, Mo., the voters have consistently defeated a tax increase and the school board recently announced it would keep submitting the tax proposal every three weeks until it passed.

While some of the school districts with money troubles are areas with a low tax base, many are middle class to rich. A prime example is Scarsdale, a downright well-to-do New York suburb in Westchester County.

Scarsdale defeated a school budget for the first time in its history this year. Virtually the same budget was defeated on a second vote. The voters were given a third opportunity to vote on the budget — this time with the warning that the alternative was an austerity budget on which, according to state law, they would not be able to vote. They gave in and accepted the proposed budget, and tax hike.

The problem involves both rising school operating and construction costs, and the sources of the funds to pay them.

The National Education Association (NEA) reports that for the 1969-1970 school year operating costs for regular public elementary and secondary schools amounted to about $32 billon, with capital expenditures adding another $4.7 billion to the bill.

For the school year 1970-71, the U.S. Office of Education estimates current expenses and interest will total about $37 billion and capital outlay $5.5 billion.

Of this, according to the NEA, the federal government pays 6.6 per cent, the states pay 41 per cent and localities raise about 53 per cent. The figures cited are the national average — avtually localities in some states pay a larger percentage while in others the state picks up most or all of the tab.

The methods localities use to raise money vary from state to state, and sometimes from community to community. Speaking generally large cities such as New York include education in the city budget and the voters have no opportunity to vote on specific outlays.

It is in suburban and rural areas, in states that do not foot the education bill, where funds for operating expenses are raised through property taxes, or sometimes sales taxes, and for capital outlays through voter-approved bond issues.

And that is where the taxpayer revolt is taking place.

The taxpayers are not just rebelling against increases in operating costs.

Education officials all over the country agree that something must be done to change the economic base of public school systems. School finance expert A. Terry Weathers, a vice president of the New York State School Boards Association, called the present system "inequitable," and urged a change from the "restrictive property tax base" to "a broader state tax base with assistance from the federal government."

James Williams, a researcher for the Illinois Education Association, said: "A much greater part of the money must come from the state and national levels if we are going to have a quality education in Illinois."

In state after state, the results of the UPI survey tend to prove his point.

In Illinois school districts have been plagued by defeat of school referenda proposing bond issues and increases in property taxes. The effect has been reduction in educational servcies, double shifts for students until more buildings can be built, and liberal borrowing in anticipation of property tax collections. Two districts currently are in critical need of operating funds.

In Georgia an education spokesman said some schools districts would be "in trouble" this fall because of financial problems and added: "I don't know how many...I don't believe anyone knows." He said he did not anticipate any schools closing for lack of money.

DeKalb Country, with Georgia's second largest school system, had planned for $3 million to be raised via local taxes in a $49 million budget. The proposal was defeated and C. L. Harper, associate schools superintendent for the Atlanta suburb, said: "This year we are operating on an interim or deficit financing budget. If the Legislature doesn't make any other sources of revenue available, we will end this year with a $3 million deficit."

New York state is no exception to the problem. The Education Department reported on July 21 that 82 of the 677 districts voting budgets in May, June and July had rejected them. Since then 31 of the 82 have approved budgets. The State Education Law prohibits closing of schools because of budget defeats. Instead the local school board cam impose a contingency or austerity budget, on which no vote is needed.

And this is what has been happening in a number of Nassau and Suffolk County schools over the past few years. The two counties on Long Island just beyond New York City are in the lead of the taxpayers revolt.

Last year 47 school budgets went down to defeat in the two counties and the figure thus far this year is 39.

School expert Weathers, of Farmingdale, Long Island, explained why, in his view, the turndowns were taking place:

"People are feeling the frustration of other tax increases and the prospect of making ends meet in the face of ever-rising inflation. So they take out their frustrations by rejecting any more school taxes. The school tax is the one tax increase on which voters can cas a yes or no ballot."

Pennsylvania law provides for a state takeover of "distressed" school districts, and four are now in that category. A number of others might be eligible for similar state help but prefer to avoid ceding local authority to state-appointed school boards by not requesting such status.

DEADLINE IS FRIDAY FOR FILING PAPERS

Candidates for the governing boards of six public bodies on Marin County's November general election ballot have only until Friday to file their nominations.

The deadline originally was Sept. 10, but Gov. Ronald Reagan has signed urgency legislation advancing the deadline by two weeks, county elections officer Peter Meyer reported.

Vacancies are to be filled on the governing boards of the Marin Hospital District, Strawberry Recreation District, Terra Linda Park and Recreation District, Tamalpais Union High School District and Fairfax and Ross school districts.

Also changed was the deadline to submit arguments for and against ballots on the county and local district ballots. It was advanced from Sept. 10 to Sept. 4.

ANGELA SPELLS
Maid of Marin

Marinite Is Third In Beauty Race

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — Angela Spells, a 17-year-old Novatoan who earlier this year won the title of Maid of Marin, was named second runnerup last night in the Maid of California judging.

The beauty title went to Kathleen Hammond, a 21-year-old secretary from Whittier who recently won the Miss Los Angeles County contest.

As the Maid of California, Miss Hammond will reign over the State Fair, which runs until Sept. 9.

Second place went to Jill Shelton, 22, who is Miss Orange County.

Miss Spells, the daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Curnel Spells of 377 Alameda del Prado, won the Maid of Marin title in June and, along with Suzanne Lowe of Healdsburg, reigned over the Sonoma-Marin Fair.

Peace Group Sets Session

The Marin Peace Coalition has scheduled a convocation on war issues Sept. 25 and 26 at Olney Hall, College of Marin, consisting of lectures and workshops.

The lecture sessions will cover "The History of Southeast Asia," with Quin Wilson, history instructor, College of Marin; "The Economics of American Foreign Policy," and "Creative Alternatives."

The lineup for workshops is draft counseling, Carol Shattuck, Womens International League for Peace and Freedom; peace candidates, attorney Thomas T. Storer, use of media, Bryan Gaddy, Marin Peace Coalition, and legislation, Dennis Allen, American Friends Service Committee on Legislation.

The Sept. 2 session will be from 8 to 10 p.m. and the Sept. 26 program from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

The largest railway in North America is the Canadian National Railway, which operates about 35,000 miles of track.

Another Hearing For Novato Woman

Grace Patricia Halloran, 24, is to return to Marin Municipal Court Monday for further hearing of psychiatric reports to determine whether she should be released on her own recognizance.

Miss Halloran is charged with arson in her home at 10 Gustafson Court, Novato, on Tuesday. She had been held without bail on the district attorney's contention that she was a danger to herself and the community. Judge Peter Allen Smith had ordered a mental examination and Judge Hadden W. Roth yesterday set bail at $10,000.

Bruce Says Nothing New In Shoot-Out

Dist. Atty. Bruce Bales said yesterday his office still had not received ballistics reports from state experts in Sacramento in the investigation of the kidnap-murder of Superior Judge Harold F. Haley on Aug. 7.

Bales added there was nothing else new that he could release on the case, in which Judge Haley and two convicts and an accomplice died in an attempted escape from the Marin County Hall of Justice.

Just over a week after he obtained murder and kidnap warrants against convict Ruchell Magee, 31, recovering in San Quentin Prison hospital from wounds suffered in the shootout, and against Angela Y. Davis, Bales had no further clues on the whereabouts of Miss Davis.

The FBI has Miss Davis on its 10 most wanted list, but said yesterday her trail is regarded as cold, with no sure knowledge of where she was beyond the day of the bloody fray.

Marin, state and federal authorities have denied rumors that she was at the Hall of Justice the day of the shooting.

Schoonmaker Request Is Under Study

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The A.G. Schoonmaker Co., Inc., of Sausalito, wants to prevent the Army from opening second bids on a generator contract it asserts it won.

Federal Judge Joseph C. Waddy Friday took the firm's request for a permanent injunction against the Army under advisement. There was expected to be no ruling for at least a week on Schoonmaker's assertion that the Army allowed competitors "to obtain two bites at the bidding apple" for the generator contract.

Waddy has already issued a preliminary injunction and by Friday he had heard nearly two days of arguments in the case stemming from the opening of bids Feb. 27 for the Army contract for motor-driven generators.

Schoonmaker's original bid of $31.7 million was the lowest of three, but the Sausalito firm asserts that the Army gave the Boague Electric Co., Paterson, N.J., private information requested by the firm. Schoonmaker asserted that the same information was not provided to either Schoonmaker or the third bidder, Libby Welding, Inc.

Soldiers Freed In Weed Case

Three soldiers stationed at the Army Nike missile base on Smith Ranch Road, Santa Venetia, were freed in Marin Municipal Court yesterday after the district attorney's office said no complaint had been filed pending further investigation of marijuana possession charges.

The three were released from county jail, where they had been held in lieu of $2,250 bail each after being arrested by sheriff's deputies who saw the soldiers' car parked near the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium about 10 p.m. Thursday.

Freed were Stephen James Lisak, 23; John Patrick Hickler, 21, and Tae Kim Sture, 21.

Rancher Reports Cattle Rustling

Rustling is not a figment of the past, rancher Earl J. Dolcini has ruefully informed the sheriff's office. He told deputies that last Sunday he found a 2-year-old heifer shot to death and its hindquarters cut off and carried away from his ranch on the Marshall-Petaluma Road. Dolcini valued the cow at $250.

Deputies reported recovering a rifle shell casing and other evidence.

Armageddon To Play For Teen-Age Dance

Armageddon, a Marin-based rock music group, will entertain at a dance today from 8:30 to 11:45 p.m. at the Hamilton Air Force Base teen center.

The group will return to the base Friday for a similar event from 8 to 10 p.m.

Hiring Discussion

A proposal for hiring a consultant to review the proposed master drainage plan will be discussed when the Bel Aire Flood Control Zone advisory board meets at 8 p.m. Wednesday at Bel Aire School.

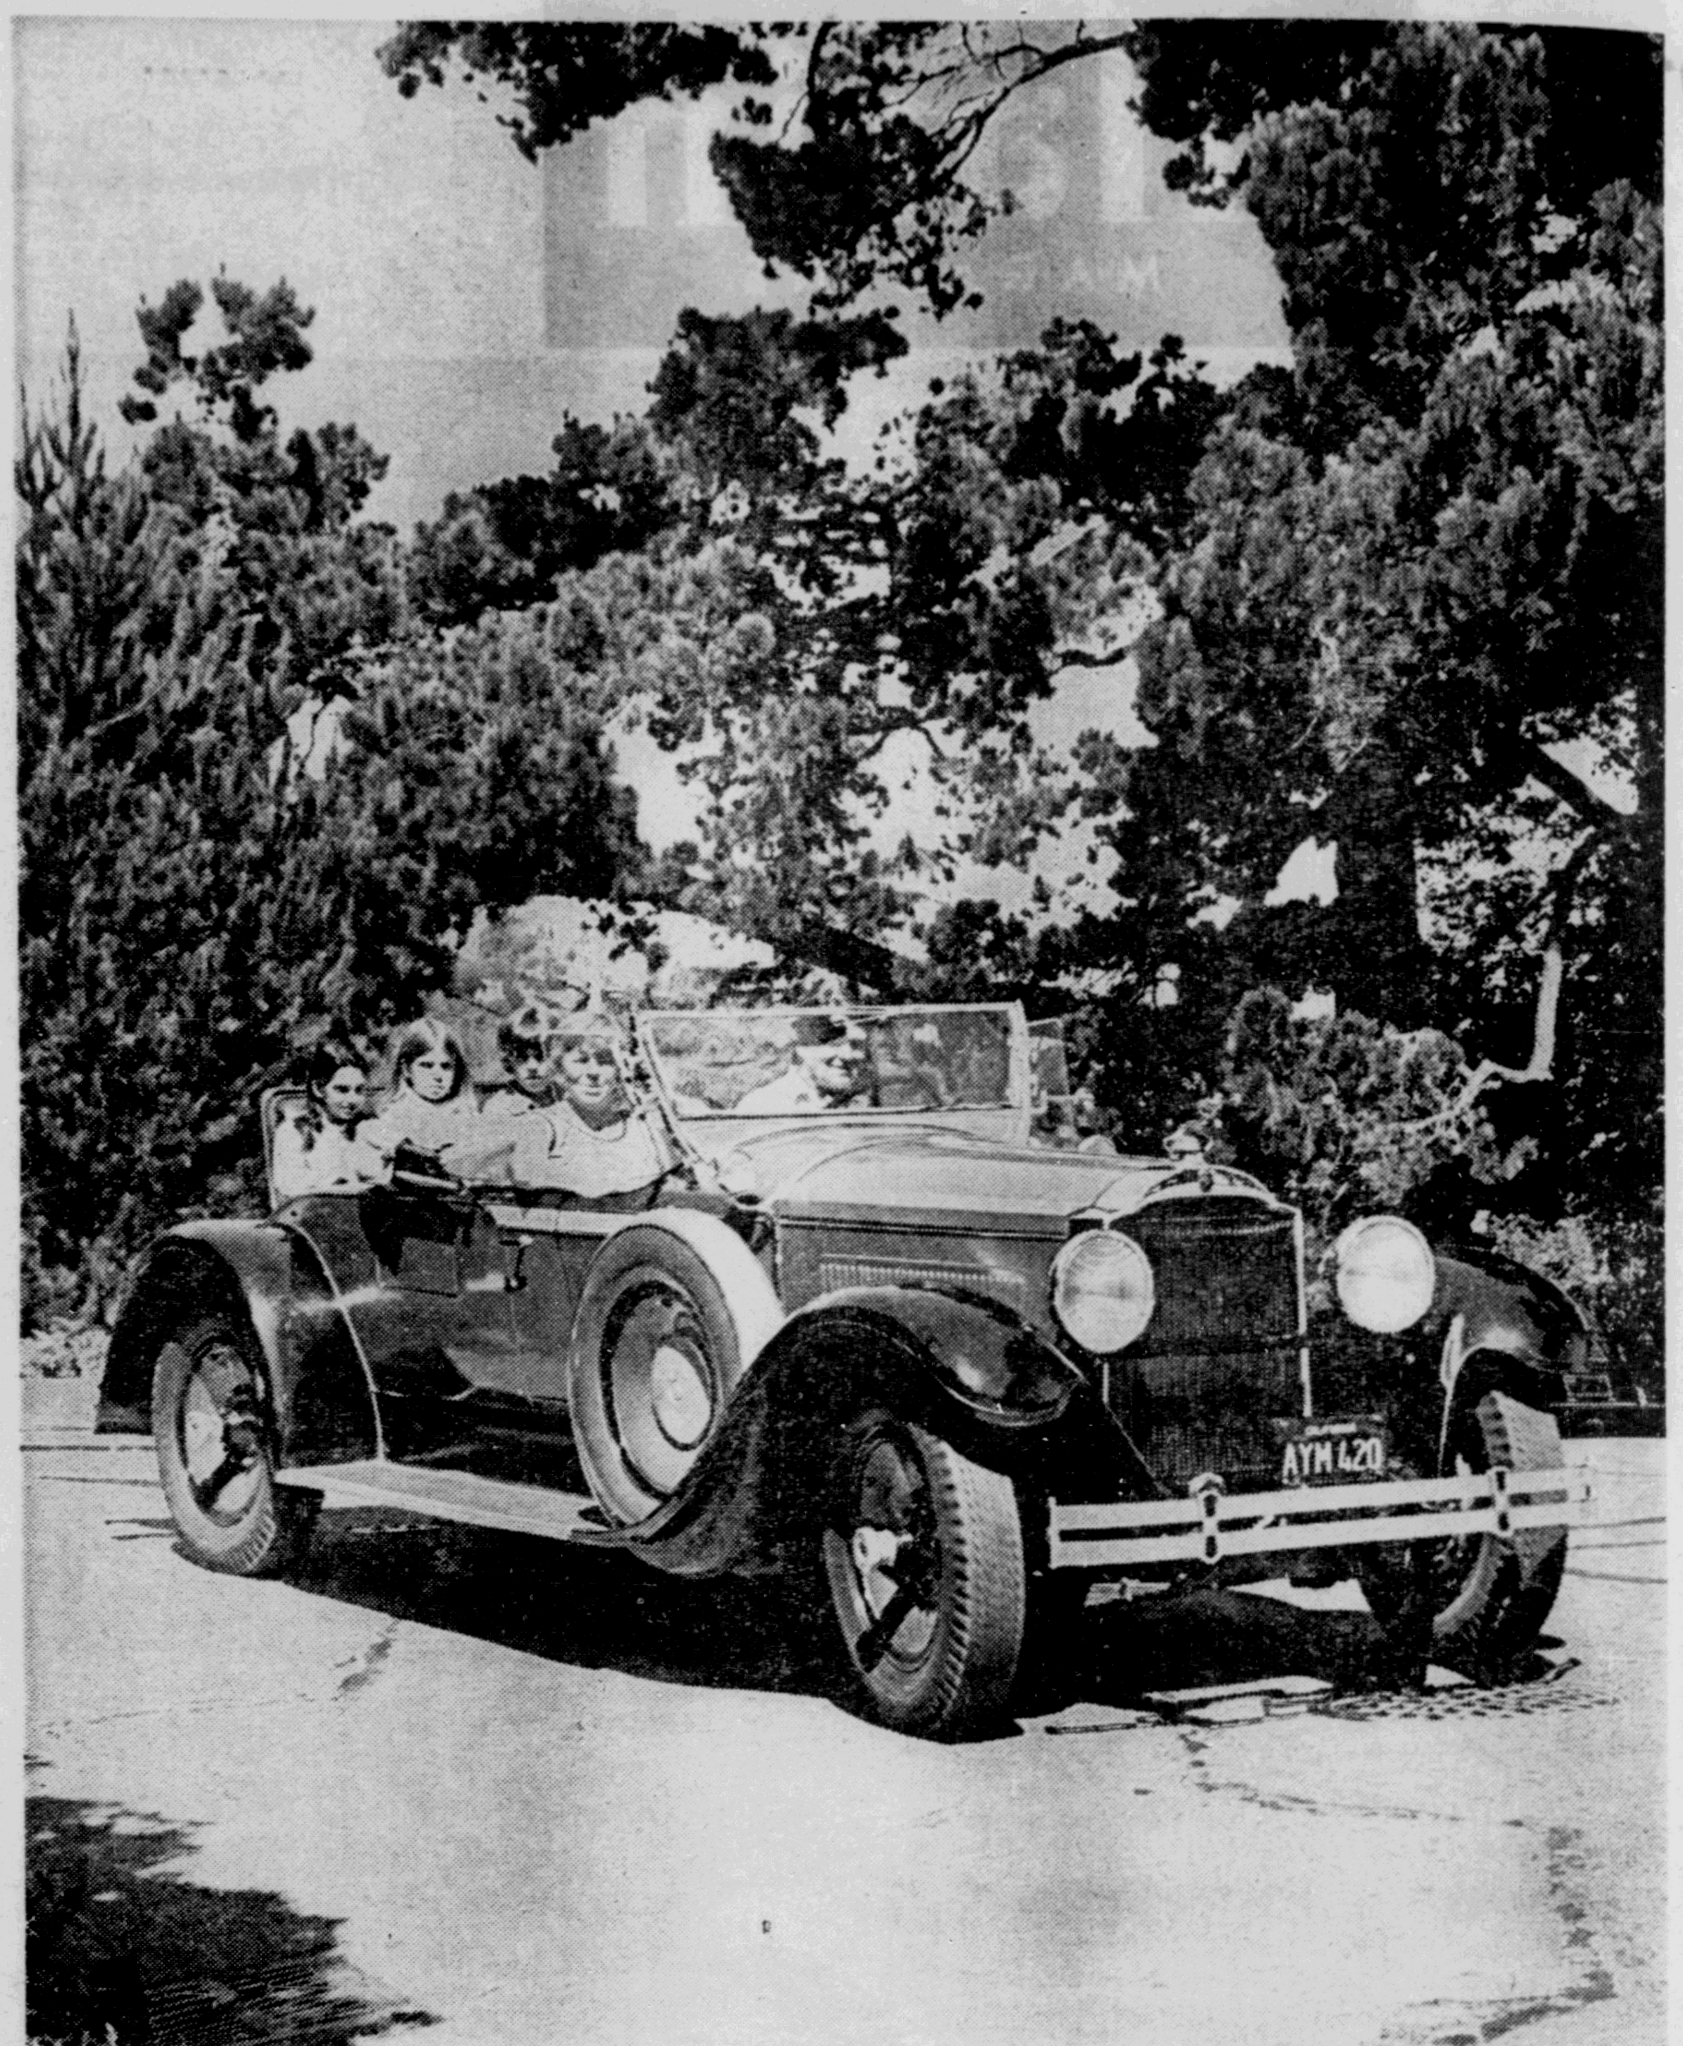
A Classic Car And A Working Car

See Page M2



THE 1929 Packard Runabout, Model 6-33, that John Sweeny of Sausalito acquired 14 years ago will be on display at tomorrow's Fifth Annual Town & Country Village Auto Show at the Strawberry shopping center, as it has at many such concours. But their "Little Old Lady," as the Sweenys affectionately refer to their classic car, is far more than just a show or special interest automobile. It is used often for practical family and neighborhood transportation. And for such special purposes as politicking and parades. She's appeared in newspaper advertisements, as well. Here enjoying a spin in their "LOL" are the Sweenys, John and wife Robin in the front seat, daughters Sarah, center, and Tara with chum Anna Maria Comstock, left, in the rumble seat. As probably the only car of its kind in Marin County, the Packard is an eye-catcher as it tools around Marin's highways and streets.

The Sweenys And Their 'Little Old Lady'

"Daddy keeps threatening to turn the car in for a sailboat, but he never will."

Tara glances knowingly at her dad: "I'm right, aren't I?"

John Sweeny looks out at the fleet of boats getting under way from the Sausalito Yacht Harbor, rubs his chin thoughtfully and admits, "I say it all the time, though I probably never will. But it's like having a Little Old Lady to take care of. There's always some ailment popping up.

"IT JUST OCCURRED to me that she's 42 years old; that's half my father's age. They're both in about the same shape."

The "LOL" is better known among car buffs as a Standard 8 Model 6-33 Runabout Packard — 1929. Considered a classic in the 1925-1948 Lincoln Continental class, it is thought to be the only one of its kind in Marin.

"Ken Larkins in Kentfield owns a 1931 Packard and across the Bay there is a 1923 model very close to ours," says Sweeny.

Sweeny found his car in a garage 14 years ago. The owner had died in an Oakland boarding house and the landlady kept the car for possible next to kin. No one ever claimed it. Finally, a decade later a mechanic bought it for his own use.

"A FRIEND OF mine told me about the Packard so we went to Oakland to see it. My wife Robin was impressed. It was the dark shiny blue paint that did it. The entire car, including the dash, wheels, everything but the chrome, had been painted blue. The chrome had been sprayed silver; so had the engine in spite of a layer of oil. The top was so loaded with white paint that it cracked and fell apart when we folded it.

"It took six months to strip the paint down to the bare metal. Now it is the color she should be: Copenhagen blue with black fenders. And she's won three prizes.

"We paid $300 for it; today it's worth $4,000. That's not out of line. I've seen some similar models selling for $40,000. Those are show cars — the kind that millionaires buy and spend $10,000 having some one restore.

"I'VE PUT IN about 1,500 hours on her and approximately $1,500, but I wasn't looking for an investment. The real attraction for me was that the car was so much like the 1931 Packard Dual-Phaeton that my dad had.

"Ours is a family, fun, working car. We follow the concours circuit and show it even though

To benefit the Northern California Kidney Foundation, Sweeny's Packard will be on display tomorrow along with more than 140 entries in the fifth annual Town & Country Village Auto Show in the front parking lot of the Strawberry shopping center from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

SPONSORING THE event are the Antique Automobile Club of America, Golden Gate Region, and the Porsche Club of America, Redwood Region. James Webb, Village manager and secretary and bulletin editor for AACA, is show coordinator.

"We expect at least 50 fine cars grouped in the Horseless Carriage (through 1915), Antique (1916-1942), and Classic (1925-1948) categories," he says. "Besides the antique and vintage cars there'll be hot rod, custom, sport and super sport cars vieing for prizes. Admission is $1, children under 12 free."

The Car Just Like Dad Used To Drive

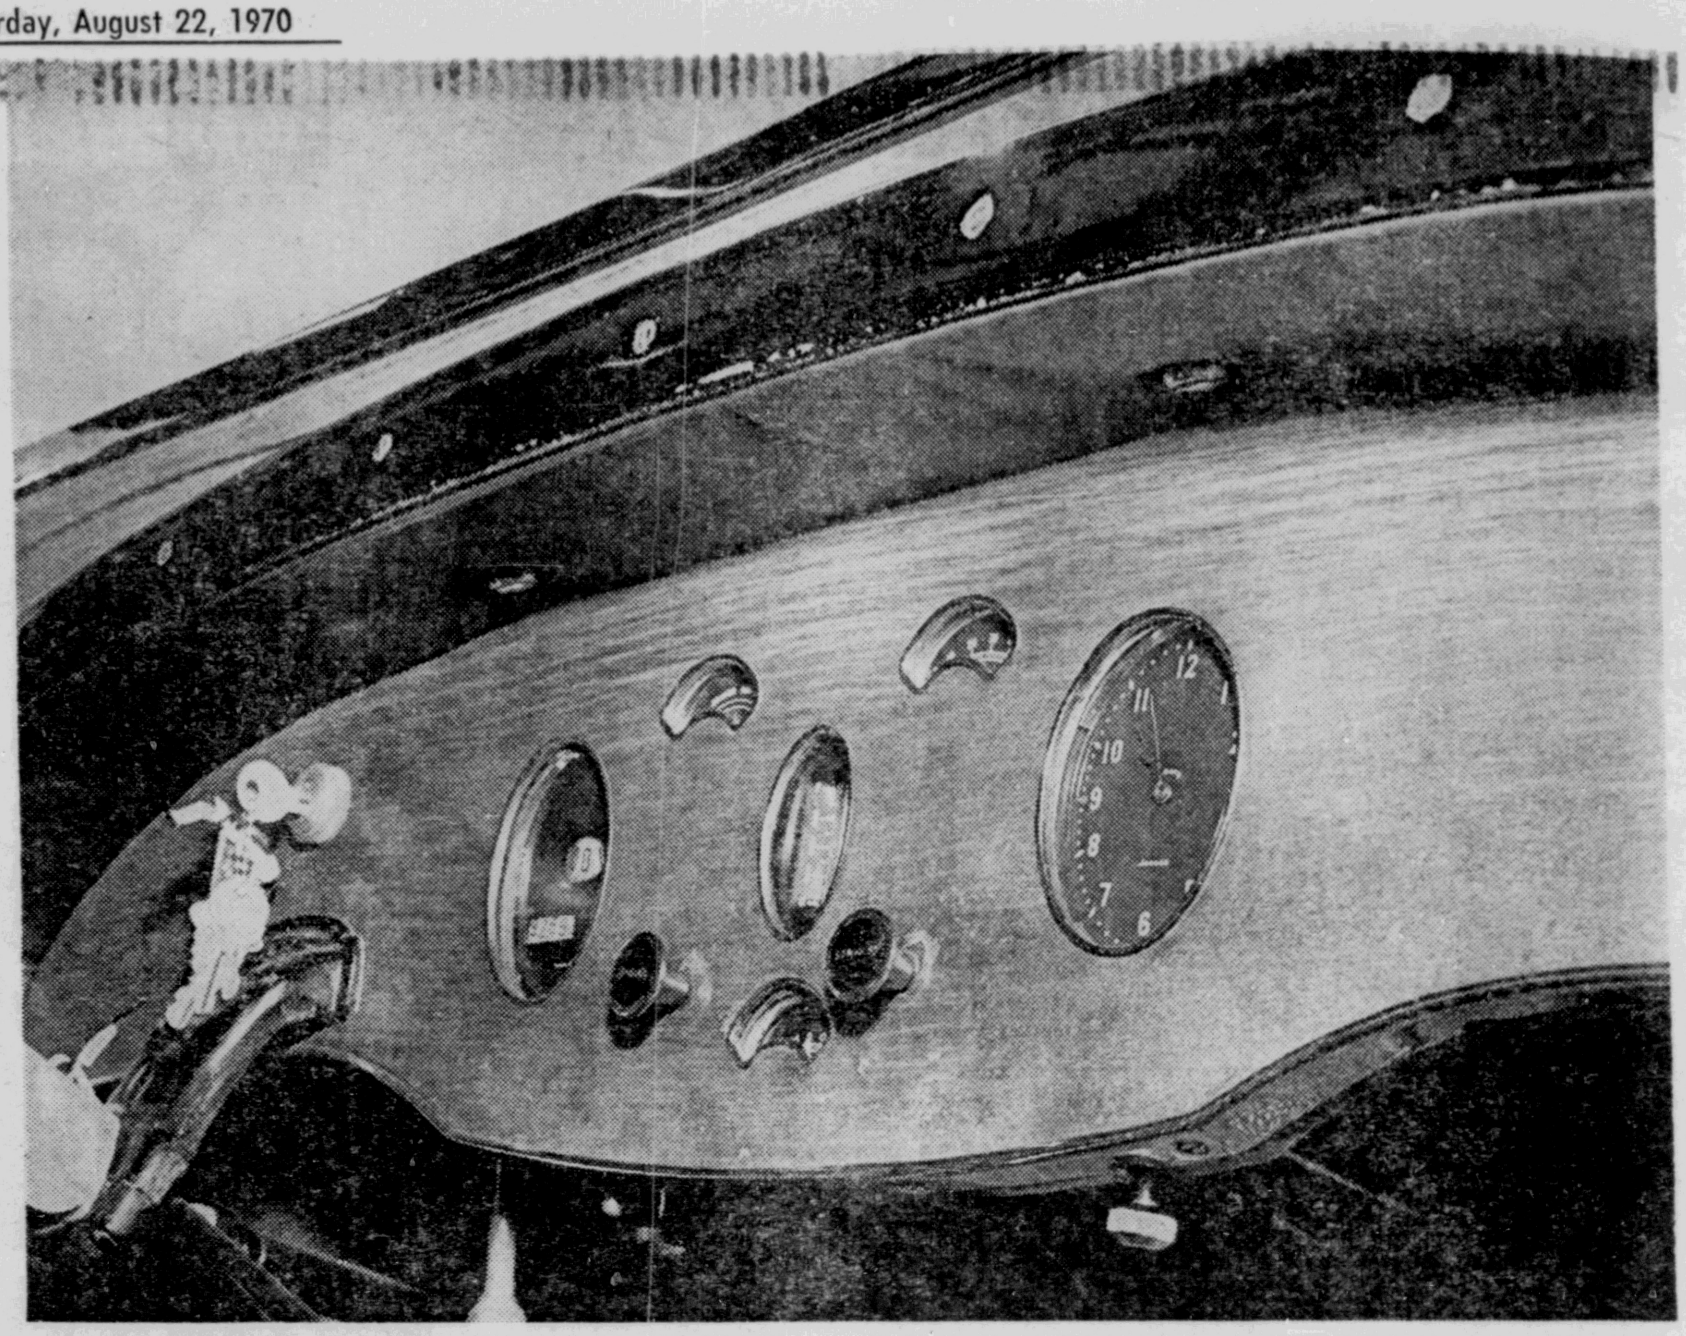
The Northern California Kidney Foundation, a three-year-old lay organization, is aided by a Scientific Advisory Council made up of 25 Bay Area doctors. Marin is represented by Dr. James Sheppard.

THE FOUNDATION maintains a drug bank program which provides the expensive medication vital for treatment, either free or at cost; provides assistance to patients who have reached the terminal stage of kidney disease with either kidney transplants or the artificial kidney machine; maintains a part-time renal clinic at San Francisco General Hospital, and sponsors an early detection program.

A recent United States Public Health survey showed more than eight million people afflicted with undetected kidney diseases. In Northern California, the Foundation predicts helping less than half of the more than 300 patients seeking transplants or treatment because of limited facilities and funds.



THE DASHBOARD of John Sweeny's 1929 Packard runabout will bring back memories for others who used to drive a car like it, when the instruments were fewer, but always reliable. Like the rest of the car, except for the chrome, the dashboard was covered with a blue paint when Sweeny acquired the automobile. Its removal was part of a long and painstaking restoration project.

Jose Alvarez, NCKF's Marin fund-raising chairman, comments, "Marin is a big county with a big heart. The people will respond when they know the grave need. The Foundation hopes that volunteers will soon form a Marin chapter. That would be a major step toward establishing a local drug bank and other services."

TAKING ON HIS Packard's restoration was a new experience for Sweeny: "I'd always tinkered with cars but never did any big jobs. After we bought the Packard, Robin gave me a complete set of engine tools for Christmas and I studied and read. The first thing I discovered about the car was that it was full of Cromwell's X-3, an engine additive that had kept the car glued together. When that was cleaned out, there was nothing left but death rattles.

"It took a year and a lot of beer parties in the garage to rebuild the engine. Then we had our first launching party. It almost ended in disaster. The car went dead on Bridgeway and spurted oil all over the place. We towed her, all 4,000 pounds of her, up San Carlos so she could coast into my garage.

"We didn't bargain on anyone coming around the curve but they did. We crossed lanes at the crucial moment; I swooped into my garage and the little Isetta landed in the rose bushes across the street. Fortunately no one was hurt.

"The trouble was in the battery; we hadn't grounded it right.

"THE NEXT BLOW-UP came 2,000 miles later. That time a piece of the engine blew out; a connecting rod bolt had given up. It was one of the original ones and it wasn't the bolt's fault. I'd torqued it too hard.

"Then she was in the garage for two and a half years. It took that long to rebuild the engine and restore the interior."

"We've had some great experiences with the car," Mrs Sweeny recalls. "I think the most frightening and most unexpected was when the helicopter news reporter swooped down and signaled for me to slow down so he could inspect the car. He descended, took a thorough look, yelled thanks and took off."

"WE DON'T KEEP it wrapped in cellophane; it's used all the time," Robin continues. "Even for car pooling Tara and Sarah to St. Hilary's. Sister says that on the days I drive, the dismissal period breaks down completely.

"We use it every year for the Little League Opening Day Parade, and have often participated in the Fourth of July Bolinas parades. Last year we toured San Simeon with a caravan of classic cars and rendezvoused with a caravan from Los Angeles.

"This year Tara wanted to

THE CHROME ON his 1929 Packard Runabout had been sprayed a silver hue, hiding the natural beauty of the spare tire carriers and other parts.

This John Sweeny carefully removed, so that today the venerable old motor car looks very much as it did when it first came off the production line.

have a birthday-hiking party on Bolinas Ridge. We had to take two cars and to keep the kids happy half went up in the Packard, the other half rode down it it. You can get seven kids into it uncomfortably."

"THE LOL IS very photogenic, too," John adds proudly. She's been used in a series of Macy ads and will appear in McCall's feature story on Merryvale Antiques.

"And it's a great car for politicking: guaranteed elections. No one's ever lost who has used it. We've traveled around the town and the county for Jan Dyk, twice elected to the Sausalito City Council; for Michael Wornum's 1968 board of supervisors campaign; and, in the recent primaries for Peter Behr."

It proved a winner in 1968 for Robin Sweeny when she threw her hat into the political ring for a seat on the Sausalito City Council.

TWO YEARS LATER, Robin considers the goals achieved as the most rewarding aspect of the job. Like the recent $500,600 bond issue passed; the biggest one of any consequence in the city's history. It will finance the Central Waterfront Plan, a six-block site with most of the land underwater, designed to be used for civic buildings, a library, recreational activities and a yacht basin. The emphasis is on keeping open water.

Before winning the council seat, Robin worked with the Save Our Shores committee in 1964-65 to protest a 40-acre waterfront development with 20 acres of filling for the bay. Faced with 1,000 protesting signatures the council vetoed the project. For further waterfront protection, the council declared a three year moratorium on Bay fills, the first town in the Bay Area to make the move.

Residents of Sausalito since 1953, Robin, a surgical nurse, is from New York, and Sweeny, born in San Francisco and raised in Marin, is a marine insurance underwriter. An expert sailor, he was commodore of the Sausalito Yacht Club in 1961 and, from 1965-67 served on the Sausalito Planning Commission.

HE IS A member of the Antique Automobile Club of America, Golden Gate Region, and the Classic Car Club.

A stickler for authenticity, Sweeny enjoys judging car shows and usually does three a year. Some of the points he looks for are the car's appeal as an art object; how well it has been preserved; how authentic ("This can be bad. Some cars get a plastic look from bad paint jobs or the wrong colors, and then there's the question of settling for vinyl instead of leather as well as other details."); and, the caliber of restoration.

At the word restoration, Sweeny says patiently, wistfully, "With the LOL, problems are always cropping up. Not long ago she needed her starter rebuilt. Now she's due for elective surgery; she has a sick piston."

"We could always sell her, dad. Couldn't we?" Tara teases.

"Yes," the Sweenys chorus, "but we probably never will."

A History Of The Tiburon Peninsula

(Editor's Note: This history of the Tiburon Peninsula is another of the manuscripts completed by the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian, prior to her death, for publication in the Marin Magazine.)

By FLORENCE DONNELLY

The early history of the Tiburon Peninsula is the story of a series of strong men, each of whom left his permanent imprint upon the area.

The first was a daring Spanish naval officer, Lt. Juan de Ayala, commander of the San Carlos, who sailed his ship into San Francisco Bay in the summer of 1775 and found a snug anchorage within a cove in an island that he named Nuestra Senora de Los Angeles and is today's Angel Island.

De Ayala and his aides charted San Francisco Bay and named a number of places. And among the points visited and explored were the nearby Marin coastline.

BUT IN THE historic sense the De Ayala visit was a fleeting one and it was left to an Irish native who became a naturalized Mexican citizen, John T. or Juan Reed, to make a deeper impression upon the area.

Reed was given a vast land grant that covered much of Southern Marin. In return for the grant, made in 1834, he was to build a sawmill that would provide badly needed wood for the presidio and pueblo of Yerba Buena or San Francisco. Thus the name of the rancho — Rancho Corte Madera del Presidio, meaning "the cutting of wood for the presidio."

Reed built his sawmill in what is now Mill Valley.

RICHARD HENRY Dana Jr. in his "Two Years Before the Mast" described the abundance of timber in the area in relating how his ship had anchored in San Francisco Bay to take on a cargo of hides plus wood and water "for both of which San Francisco is the best place on the coast."

Dana marveled: "A small island, situated about two leagues from the anchorage, called by us Wood Island and by the Spaniards Isla de los Angeles, was covered with trees to the water's edge; and to this two of our crew, who . . . could handle an axe like a plaything, were sent every morning to cut wood. In about a week, they had cut enough to last a year . . . ."

Most probably, the water for the ship came from the sweet springs of the Tiburon Peninsula.

REED'S RANCHO covered 8,878.8 acres and included the peninsula. There Reed set up a large cattle ranch and called it his Portero de la Punta del Tiburon — Pasture of Point Tiburon. His daughter, Hilarita, and his son-in-law, Dr. Benjamin Lyford, continued, after the pioneer Reed's death in 1843 leaving his estate to his widow and three surviving children, to exercise a great influence upon the history of the Tiburon area.

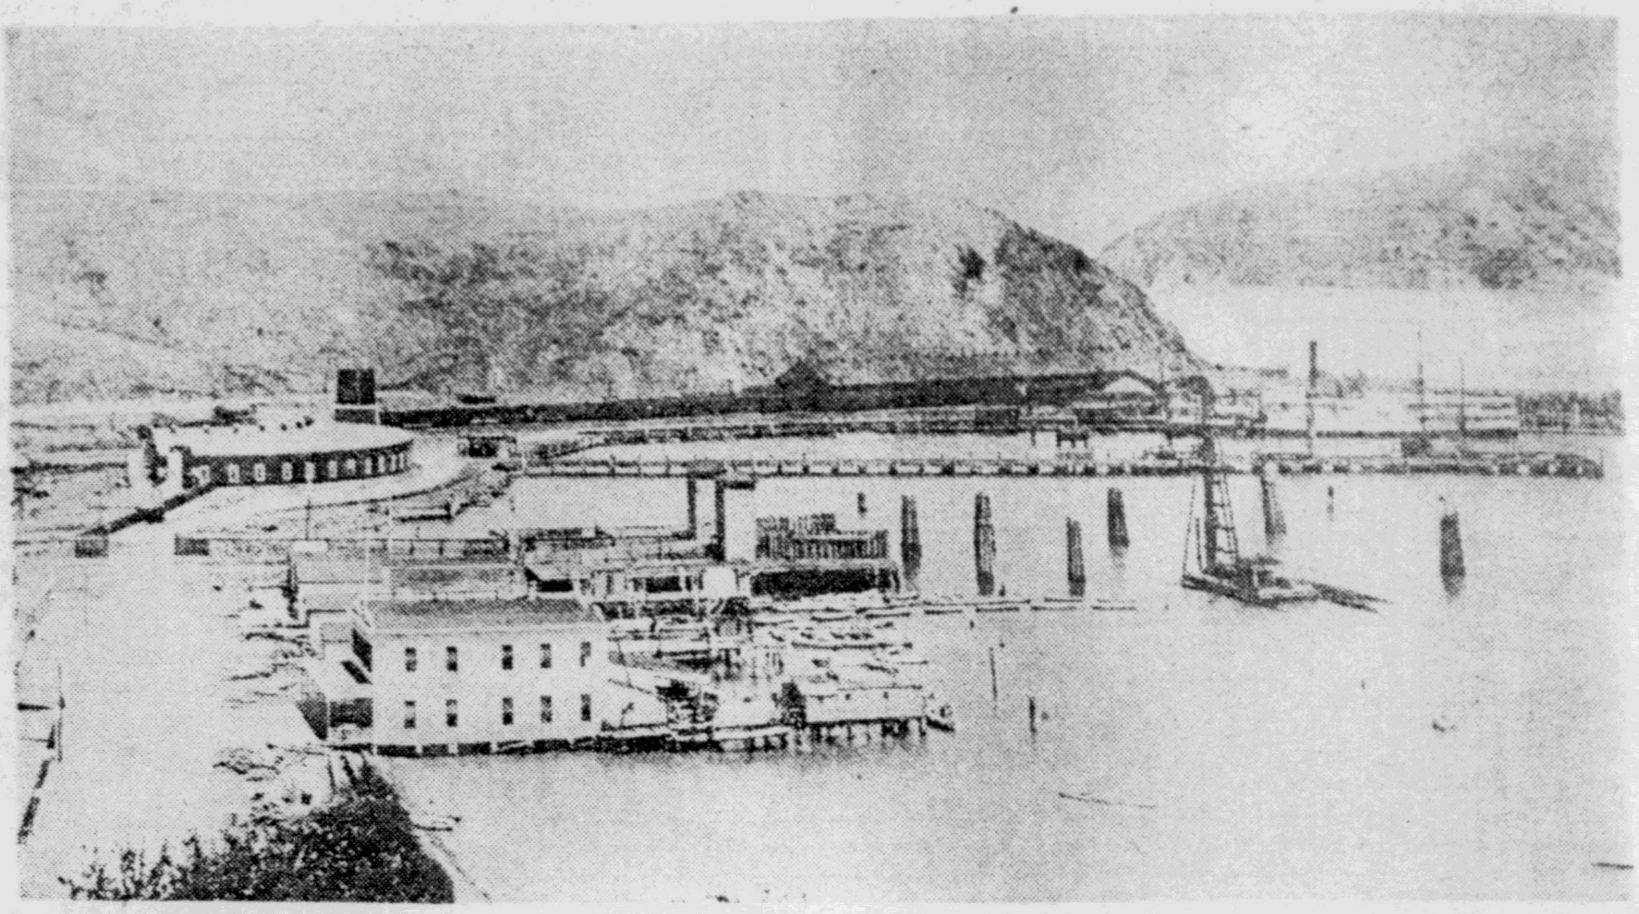
But the Reed-Lyford story has been told in detail earlier by this writer in other articles in this magazine. And there were other men who also left their stamp upon the peninsula — men such as Jose Yves Limantour, Israel Kershaw and Benjamin Rush Buckelew.

Limantour is an especially fascinating character, and Helen Van Cleave Park, a director of the Marin County Historical Society and an active historian herself, has done special research upon him.

LIMANTOUR, SHE says, was a Frenchman who became a naturalized Mexican citizen, as had Reed. As a partner with the Bordeaux firm of Bizet and Russell he set sail with his ship the Ayacucho for California, flying a Mexican flag and under a Mexican captain, with a cargo of luxury goods that included French silk brocades, clothing, perfumes, brandies, cheese, sweetmeats and condiments.

These were goods not carried by the Boston trade ships and craved by the rancheros of California.

The Ayacucho reached Monterey and then set sail for San Francisco Bay, but somehow missed the Golden Gate and continutd north along the coast. On Oct. 27, 1841, the ship was stranded on a sandbar at the entrance to what became known as Limantour Bay, an inlet of Drake's Bay.



THIS PHOTOGRAPH of early Point Tiburon was printed by the Marin Journal in 1893 in its "Souvenir of Marin County." Five years later that newspaper said of Tiburon: "Besides the railroad population there is a sprinkling of fishermen from sunny Italy and the isles of Greece, who live in the hulks of old vessels sunk in the sand or in little cabins along the shore . . ." (Photo courtesy of Mrs. F. Pfeffer)

LIMANTOUR AND his men succeeded in salvaging about three-fourths of the cargo and getting it to the beach. There they remained marooned for some time until eventually they were shown —perhaps by friendly Indians — the direction to San Francisco Bay.

The cargo was taken to Yerba Buena where Limantour dried out the goods and set up a store to offer it for sale.

Officals of the Hudson Bay Co. arrived in Yerba Buena on Dec. 1, 1841, among them Duflot de Mofras, a Frenchman instructed by his government to submit a report on his observations along the Pacific Coast. De Mofras was delighted to find in Limantour a man with whom he could converse in his native tongue. De Mofras advised his new friend to acquire land on San Francisco Bay.

LIMANTOUR, however, first returned to Mexico, then came back to Yerba Buena in 1843. The Mexican government's Department of California was in a desperate financial crisis, and Limantour loaned money to hard-pressed Gov. Manuel Micheltorena.

From 1846 to 1850 California was occupied by United States military forces. Then, in 1850, it was admitted to the Union. The U.S. government appointed a land commission to review all California land grants.

Limantour returned to California from one of his trips to Mexico in the winter of 1853, and then, on Feb. 3, 1854, filed two claims with the land commission.

ONE LAID CLAIM to about 16,000 acres in San Francisco, and the other to the islands of Alcatraz, Yerba Buena and the Farallones and to the "sobrante" or residue land of Tiburon. This last especially caused surprise, for it had been generally thought that the Reed grant had included all of that land.

In the final days before the filing deadline, Limantour placed six more claims for California land with the commission.

For three years the Limantour claims were contested before the land commission. In 1856, one commissioner confirmed the San Francisco claim. The same year another commissioner approved the claim of Limantour for the islands of Alcatraz, Yerba Buena, Angel and the Farallones, and for the sobrante land of the Corte Madera del Presidio.

AN APPEAL was made to the United States District Court and presented for the government by the famous attorney William Blanding who had arrived in San Francisco in 1854 and had been appointed U.S. attorney the following year. His son, Gordon, also a lawyer, was later to have a palatial estate of his own on Belvedere Island, then regarded as part of the Punto del Tiburon.

In December, 1856, Limantour was indicted for fraud and perjury on the testimony of a witness who later was to retract his accusations. Limantour posted bond and went to Mexico to seek evidence and witnesses to support his case. By August, 1857, he was back in San Francisco, demanding that the government bring the fraud case to an immediate trial.

This time the government's case was handled by a new U.S. attorney, Peter de la Torre. And trial witnesses on both sides included many prominent pioneers such as Capt. William A. Richardson, Henry W. Halleck, Pab'o de la Guerre, Jean Vioget, Fernando Feliz and Juan N. Padilla.

LIMANTOUR FELT his case was going well, and thus made another trip to the home he maintained in Mexico City in late 1857. But there were

"Why Did My Pre-Shrunk Skirt Shrink?"

The manufacturer wasn't exactly truthful. The skirt is constructed of two fabrics, bonded together. The inner layer is preshrunk. The outer layer, probably in the interest of manufacturer economy, is not pre-shrunk. The manufacturer's theory and hope was that the preshrunk inner fabric, bonded to the outer fabric, would keep the latter from shrinking. It didn't. The manufacturer should have labeled your skirt "Partially preshrunk." Actually, the word "Pre-shrunk" should not have been used in relation to your skirt. It was not dimensionally stable.

The Tiburon Peninsula—How It Grew

presented in court enlargements of photographs of Limantour's supporting documents that seemed to show inconsistencies in the printing, the paper and the Mexican seal.

To the astonishment of Limantour's lawyers and of their client as well, they lost the case.

Many persisted in the belief that Limantour had been framed. But now all his hopes of owning the islands or a part of the Tiburon Peninsula were gone.

Limantour, however, did not allow his troubles in California to ruin his life. He remained in Mexico City, amassed a fortune there and lived a long life. Several members of the family still live in Mexico and remain prominent in Mexican affairs.

THE CONTROVERSIAL role that Limantour played on the Tiburon Point proper was assumed by Israel Kershaw on Belvedere Island, which, even in those times, was not technically a separate island except at high tide, but attached to the peninsula by a causeway.

But unlike Limantour, Kershaw was an actual resident of the property he claimed. For some 30 years he lived on Belvedere, and for a good part of that time he and his family were its only occupants.

He remains a somewhat shadowy figure in history, and when his name pops up from time to time in the old historic records, it is frequently with varying spellings — Kershaw, Kashaw, Kashow.

JEANNE SKINNER Van Nostrand wrote for the California Historical Society Quarterly issue of December, 1942, of Israel Kashaw as a member of a party organized in New York City in the winter of 1848-49, its members "highly educated, of fine appearance, good moral habits and unblemished reputations, from the best families of New York," that had as its purpose an overland trek to California.

Second in command was John Woodhouse Audubon, under Col. Henry Livingston Webb. Audubon had served a 17-year apprenticeship to his famous father in the compilation of "Birds of America," and one of his prime purposes in making the westward expedition was to collect, sketch and preserve wildlife specimens along the way.

It is quite likely that Kershaw obtained from Audubon at that time an interest in wild species and their conservation that he was to demonstrate later at Belvedere, to the benefit of later generations.

THE NEW YORK company made the journey west along a route that first swung south into Mexico then north again, and endured terrible suffering before finally reaching California, their ranks decimated by cholera and hunger.

Kershaw thus arrived in California in 1850, but it was not until about 1855 that he first saw Belvedere Island, isolated but beautiful, and decided to settle there.

He was a big man, a strong one, an active and hotly-tempered person, and his name under one of its several spellings appeared in the press or public records from time to time.

MINUTES OF the district court for 1858 and 1859 list him as a juror. The Marin County Journal of July 29, 1865, reported he had been drawn to serve as a grand juror. A story in the same paper on June 17 of that year had told of an inquest after the body of a man had been found "at Kashaw's Island on Saucelito Bay." At least twice he was involved physically in altercations.

Recorded in Book 1 of Deeds, Page 12, is a Feb. 21, 1866, transaction by which Israel Ka-

THE HISTORY of the Tiburon Peninsula and Belvedere Island has been a story of strong men who sparked its development while preserving much of its original charm. One of them was George E. Ring, who owned 320 acres on the peninsula fronting on the bay, who served Marin as a county supervisor, and who gave his name to Ring's Point on Marin's early maps.

Tiburon, Belvedere Story Is Eventful

shaw bought from Mary Jane King 25 head of dairy cows and five head of California horses.

The great register listed him as Israel Kashaw, 49, a farmer, and the records of 1866 show a "Kashaw" indebtedness to John J. Conlin of $400 for the construction of a draw in the bridge over the entrance to "Kashaw Lagoon on the public road from Tiburon."

THE SAN FRANCISCO Bulletin reported and the Marin County Journal reprinted on Sept. 18, 1869, an account of a duel between two San Franciscans "at Kershaw's Island."

There were other recorded transactions and agreements involving Kershaw, and Sausalito newspaper reports of the delivery of oysters from his waters to John F. Morgan.

A map of Marin County compiled by County Surveyor Hiram Austin in 1873 shows "Kershaw Island — 210 acres."

IN THAT SAME year on March 24 an agreement was recorded by which Kershaw proposed to sell his island and tidelands holdings, with the exception of two houses, to William T. Coleman, the San Francisco and San Rafael capitalist, for $5,000. Terms called for a $100 down payment, a $2,000 installment after Coleman had examined the land, and the remainder after Kershaw had vacated his house.

Apparently, however, the deal never went through, and the Kershaws remained on their island.

The 1885 directory of coast counties still listed Israel Kashaw as owner of 148 acres and master mariner, Israel Kashaw Jr. as postmaster and Acey Kashaw as a fisherman.

BUT SINCE 1865 Kershaw had been involved in litigation, seeking to defend his property claims.

The main fight was instigated by a visiting New York lawyer, James Clinton Bolton, who persuaded the Reed heirs that although the island where the Kershaws lived was not described in the first official U.S. survey of the Reed grant made in 1858, they could and should nevertheless lay claim to it, plus the smaller neighboring island that was to be called Corinthian as well.

Bolton was promised half of any land he could win for the heirs beyond the 1858 survey. He filed suit in U.S. Circuit Court not only for the eviction of Kershaw, but for damages as well. The lands in question were the Belvedere and Corinthian islands and their narrow connections with the Tiburon shore.

KERSHAW AT first fought the suit through his attorney, James McMillan Shafter. But abruptly, on March 14, 1868, he consented to a judgment by which the land would go to Bolton, but without monetary damages.

Despite this outcome of the suit, Kershaw remained on the island. And the issue became more clouded when the U.S. government declared it a military reservation, and all the more so when a New Yorker, Thomas B. Valentine, who had come West originally in the same party as Audubon and Kershaw, began to buy up Bolton's interests.

Valentine began a campaign to oust both Kershaw and the U.S. military from the island, claiming connivance between the "squatter" and the government.

AT ONE TIME the Army did serve an ultimatum upon Kershaw, giving him until Jan. 10, 1872, to remove his stock and improvements. An extension was first granted. Then, ultimately, a lease for the pasturing of his stock on the island.

It continued to be the Kershaw home until in 1885 a final court decision held that Belvedere and Corinthian islands, after all, had been a part of the original Reed grant. Valentine had won. Kershaw had lost his island. And the Army its military reservation.

The U.S. marshals enforced the court order, and Kershaw was evicted, returning to San Francisco. Valentine still wasn't satisfied and sued for back rent. He was awarded but $1,000. And Kershaw retained his claim to tideland property off and around the island shores.

BENJAMIN RUSH Buckelew was of a different stripe from Kershaw, something of a visionary who planned a "dream city" on the peninsula's outer shoreline that he called California City.

Buckelew was also a New Yorker. On Dec. 1, 1850, he wrote his wife: "I am now the owner of 100 square miles of land in the best locality in California. I have a steam sawmill on the Reed place and am preparing to build a large wharf and lay out California City. I am also preparing to run a steam ferryboat between San Francisco and my place . . . "

Buckelew anticipated a metropolis, but his project failed and eventually was moved in its entirety to his other property at San Quentin.

THERE IS STILL today on the Tiburon Peninsula shoreline an area known as California City, but the tract of land laid out by Buckelew as such was another three miles to the north of that site.

In that same area is Ring's Point, bearing the name of yet another influential peninsula pioneer.

George E. Ring was a native of New Hampshire who came to California in 1863 and bought 320 acres on the Tiburon Peninsula that he later expanded. He was to serve as a county supervisor and prospered as a rancher.

PETER DONAHUE is yet another strong personality who left his mark upon Tiburon. He brought his San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad to the community in April of 1884 and with it most of his settlement of Donahue's Landing on the Petaluma River, and provided peninsula residents with ferry service to San Francisco.

The story of Belvedere and Tiburon is not, however, entirely a story of a few prominent men. Events and places, too, had their impact. And a company, the Belvedere Land Co., organized in 1888, had a continuing influence.

The company bought a large parcel of land, and surveyed and subdivided it. Roads were built, fresh water was piped to every lot and all houses were required "to sewer directly into the bay."

LONG A part of the Tiburon scene has been the ferryboat. The proudest of them all was the James M. Donahue, above, named by rail and ferry magnate Peter Donahue for his only son. It was succeeded at right by the Marin, originally the Requa, but rechristened after it burnt and was rebuilt. The Marin was long in service on the Sausaltio to Tiburon run making a stop at Belvedere.

cized the "night boats" traveling to and from San Francisco and made mention, too, of "fine fishing, beautiful walks, an unsurpassed marine view, unequaled sailing and rowing." Attractive homes were built and the population began to grow.

By 1896, Belvedere was ready for incorporation. Minutes for the trustee meeting of Dec. 28, 1896, listed the trustees as Peter Dean, L.L. Dunbar, J.W. Pew, V.J.A. Rey and A.G. Fusenot. H.F. Burhmeister was clerk, C.O. Perry the treasurer and N.A. McLean the marshal.

If the new city was mainly one of fine homes, it was not completely without industry. Union Fish Co. began operation of its plant on the west side of Belvedere in 1875, and that processing continued until 1937 when a fire destroyed wharves and warehouses.

SCHOONERS CAME from Alaska carrying both cod and salmon. Trays of fish dried in the sun. The late Parker F. Wood recalled being on a ship that took on cans of salmon at Belvedere.

The Marin Journal of April 7, 1898, reported:

"The residents of Belvedere have a habit of looking down upon the people on the plain. From their lofty eyrie they could hardly do otherwise. They even look down upon the sea."

The Journal took note that the Belvedere public school was prospering "under the charge of Miss Boynton" with 25 pupils, that a fleet of 40 yachts and 30 arks was moored in the bay, and that a half dozen clubhouses furnished accommodations for visitors from the city.

MRS. TEN BROECK, an early resident, could remember when there were but a few houses and the fishing company buildings on the island "and all the rest was over-run by wild cattle and goats, and rattlesnakes were everywhere."

But by Dec. 28, 1896, urbanization had reached a point where the Belvedere City Council felt it necessary to enact an ordinance prohibiting the shooting or trapping of quail, grouse, dove, pigeon, duck, goose, rabbit, squirrel "or other wild or tame game."

Another ordinance now prohibited the running at large of "horses, mares, cows, colts, calves, bulls, sheep, goats, pigs, oxen, mules or asses."

IN 1899 THE real estate firm of Shainwald, Buckee & Co. could run an advertisement in the Marin Journal claiming Belvedere to be "the most popular of any location on the Bay of San Francisco . . . Where there were no houses a short time ago, there are now 50, all of them most modern and artistic in design, occupied by owners who are most widely known in the select circles of society."

"Belvedere is laid out in villa lots of liberal dimensions facing well-made avenues. The tract is covered with a fine growth of natural forest trees. Sheltered from the severe trade winds but with the heat of the summer tempered by the neighborhood of the bay, the climate is absolute perfection.

"ITS GEOGRAPHICAL location and the absolute control by the company of all avenues of approach secure it from the nuisance of outside intrusion that beset so many of the resorts of California.

"The bayshore offers numerous landings for steam launches and pleasure craft, and its clear waters are unrivaled for bathing purposes and afford unlimited facilities for boating and yachting."

Arks or houseboats, many of them luxurious, anchored in Belvedere Cove during the summer, then in winter were towed or poled to the shelter of the lagoon under a drawbridge that was raised twice a year to permit this migration. When much of the cove was filled for boulevard construction, the arks were landlocked. Some of them remain there today.

BELVEDERE residents enjoyed water sports and such spectaculars as "Belvedere's Night in Venice." Along with a story of that event, the Marin Journal in September of 1899 ran artists' sketches of houseboats and small craft decked with garlands and adorned with Chinese lanterns.

Said the reporter: "The decorations and illuminations on the houseboats and crafts of all kinds and the beautiful homes and buildings of Belvedere were lavish and artistic. The number of visitors was estimated at 7,000 . . ."

Harry B. Allen, who had loved Belvedere since boyhood and who grew up to become head of the Belvedere Land Co., was responsible for one of his community's greatest assets. It was he who decided to buy 23 acres from the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Co. along the north side of the lagoon and develop a picturesque community upon its shores. Allen also presented a park to Belvedere that was dedicated in May of 1958.

SAILING HAS long been an important activity in both Belvedere and Tiburon.

The San Francisco Yacht Club was organized in that city in 1869, but moved, first to Sausalito and then to Belvedere. The site of the old Belvedere Hotel was acquired in 1925 and the new San Francisco Yacht Clubhouse dedicated in 1934.

Nearby, but just across the line in Tiburon, is the Corinthian Yacht Club, chartered in 1886. It built its facilities on the tip of what was then called Valentine's Island, but which later took its name from the yacht club.

MANY OF THE fine homes of Belvedere including the Barber, Bridge, Kohen, Spence, Harrison, Hendry and Guerrez residences, were the work of Dan McLean, who arrived there in 1892 and established a construction business.

McLean was also the organizer of the Belvedere Fire Department and for many years its chief. As building inspector he did much to preserve the natural beauty of Belvedere. He saw long service on the city council and was a director of the Marin Municipal Water District and the Marin Mosquito Abatement District.

But one of the earliest mansions in Belvedere was a five-story, 22-room place built by Willis Polk in 1862. The father of James L. Heynemann bought the mansion and estate in 1900, and later the house was demolished and a more modern structure erected on its site.

BOOK B OF Deeds for 1892 records transfers of land by the Belvedere Land Co. to Edward B. Hedge, Helena Starr, Margaret Denny, William S. Tevis, Charles E. Miller, J.J. Rey, Lydia A. Spalding, Arthur Page, John L. Bradbury, R.L. Wheeler, Mary L. Forbes, E.M. Thomas and others.

The Great Register of Marin County in 1910 lists 107 voters in the Belvedere District — all Republicans except for 11.

Many of the large estates of Belvedere were being subdivided. Gordon Blanding, the wealthy corporation lawyer, reversed that practice by buying the entire tip of Belvedere Island and razing all its few houses but one.

THE HOUSE HE retained was a mansion built originally by a rich banker. To this he added a large gallery where he displayed his paintings by such notable artists as William Keith, who, incidentally, resided in Belvedere for a short time. Installed in the art gallery was a huge pipe organ.

Blanding erected three other houses on his spacious acreage, one a seven-bedroom place, the others a carriage house and a cottage for his chief gardener. Guards were stationed at the gates. There was a boathouse with private dock for the cabin cruiser in which Blanding commuted to San Francisco.

Although the multi-millionaire did not live on the estate in the last years of his life, he continued to keep a full retinue of servants and gardeners there.

HOUSEBOATS, some of them luxurious in size and accommodations, hillside residences and small landing wharves all can be seen in this photograph showing Belvedere Cove, already a refuge from city life for the affluent.

tified than did Gordon Blanding.

With its city limits unextended, Belvedere, despite such impetus as the 1906 San Francisco earthquake and fire, and the opening of the Golden Gate Bridge, has shown only a slow population growth. Its citizens plainly prefer it that way.

Belvedere's ambitious neighbor, Tiburon, did not incorporate until long after its sister city — in 1964. But by then it had already behind it a long and picturesque history, less one of affluence than Belvedere, but no less interesting and colorful.

THE MARIN Journal of April 7, 1898, reported: "Tiburon — Besides the railroad population there is a sprinkling of fishermen from sunny Italy and the isles of Greece, who live in the hulks of old vessels sunk in the sand or in little cabins along the shore. . . .

"The Catholics have a place of worship on the outskirts of Tiburon. The Tiburon public school has 32 pupils in attendance and has for several years been under the charge of Miss Leeds, a general favorite."

The Journal touched on a local controversy on Aug. 17, 1899, when it wrote:

"THE TIBURON Boulevard has not received the death blow as some appeared to hope and others feared. The prospects now are that the defects in the work will be fixed and the bills paid . . .

"The Journal did not advocate the boulevard as it is now located, but we believe it will make a better road than could have been secured on any other route from San Rafael to Tiburon, and when completed will make one of the finest drives in the state. . . .

"The county surveyor did not make some of the statements credited to him. He was not willing to recommend the acceptance of the road in its present condition, but stated that he thought the county could arrange with the contractor to fix it in an acceptable shape. There was a misunderstanding as to the legal requirements in the case.

"THE ROAD IS a good one and the contractor did much more work upon it than it was intended he should do. In some places the bank was so steep that it was necessary to put a stone wall on the lower side to prevent the dirt from going over the embankment on to private property. Some of this wall, Mr. Richardson claims, is not substantially built and has not the required slope."

The contractor, a Mr. Buckman, was quoted as saying he had already lost "over $2,000" on the project.

The story continued: "The boulevard has been completed from San Rafael south over the hill and across the marsh from Greenbrae, west to connect with the Ross Valley Road, mostly by convict labor. This prison labor will continue the work for about three miles farther. A very good road was built from Tiburon north for about a mile and a half by Dr. Lyford. From the end of the road Mr. Buckman's contract extends about a mile and a half farther north, which will leave a gap of about three miles more for the county to build."

TAXPAYERS IN other parts of the county had protested bitterly the use of general tax funds to pay for the construction of Tiburon Boulevard, part of which today is Paradise Drive. But Hugh McIsaac, Marin County district attorney, ruled the expenditure a legal one.

It was George D. Shearer, pioneer Marin real estate man, who took the keenest interest in the opening of the boulevard linking San Rafael to Tiburon, and who secured free right-of-way grants from Dr. Lyford and other Reed heirs, the Valentine estate and George Ring. In this he was assisted by James H. Wilkins and George Richardson.

And it was Shearer who celebrated the opening of the boulevard by taking county supervisors over it in his handsome "four-in-hand" coach to a barbecue held at El Campo, a then flourishing bayside resort on the peninsula off the new boulevard. To it came San Franciscans by chartered launch and private boats to join Marinites in picnicking, dancing at the pavilion and other pleasures.

THE BOULEVARD projec passed near a huge gash in th hillsides from where the roc was quarried, to be crushed transported by a small railroa to the shoreline, to be used i road work there, or to b shipped by barge across th bay.

Another landmark remem bered by those now in their mi dle years or older was the coa ing station at what becam known as California City.

Learning of the governme plan to buy land on the Tibur Peninsula, the board of super sors, according to the Ma Journal of April 16, 1903, "d cussed dredging of Belved Harbor, it being the probable ten ion of the government make the harbor an anch age."

BUT ON JUNE 23, 1904, same newspaper reported un the headline "Coaling Statio California City":

"The Navy Departme bought the fish plant property California City for $80,000. property has been in the ha of the present owners (Ly and Hough) for more than years and has been used drying cod and other fish."

The newspaper told, too, of large amount of money the ernment proposed to spend dredging that would permit ba tleship of the make or c of the Oregon or her sister s to go to the wharves."

"THE DECISION to selec site was based upon the rec mendation of Rear Admi Bradford," it was added.

The coaling station sup tendent and many of the ployees made their homes within walking d'stance of the installation, and it served through World War I. When ships were fueled by oil, its services were no longer needed.

The State of California received permission to operate its California Nau'ical School, later the California Maritime Academy, at the no longer required station, and the first cadets, to be trained as merchant marine officers, reported in 1931.

DURING THE construction of the Golden Gate Bridge, the California City area was also the location of a plant by which John A. Roebling & Son manufactured the huge cables needed for that mighty span. From 175 to 200 men were employed at what had once been a lumberyard. And the county built a road to accommodate the enterprise.

With the clouds of World War II hovering ominously overhead, the U.S. government asked the state to vacate California City and the Tiburon Naval Net Depot was established there.

Great secrecy was maintained during the war concerning its work and the depot strictly guarded. After peace returned, civilians learned the depot had manufactured hundreds of huge nets for the protection of West Coast and Pacific bases and ports. One of its biggest jobs was a seven-mile-long net that stretched from Sausalito to the San Francisco Marina to keep enemy submarines from the bay.

AFTER THE WAR, Navy men trained at the depot until it was closed in 1958.

California City is now under the direction of the Department of Interior, and located there is the Tiburon Oceanographic Center with the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife and its Tiburon Marine Laboratory and the Bureau of Mines Marine Minerals Technology Center. Nine acres, formerly the Roebling property, were added to its holdings by the government, but two parcels have been declared surplus and upon them are now located two county parks, Paradise Beach, 19 acres and very popular, and Tiburon Uplands, 18 acres, left undeveloped.

If California City was a city that never existed as such except in name, Tiburon remained a struggling railroad and fishing town of the late 1800's and early 1900s that had clung tenaciously to survival.

THEN ITS "business district" consisted only of a couple of grocery and general merchandise stores and a "hash house" or two.

Tiburon residents, however, were not totally disinterested in culture, as indicated by the report in the Marin Journal in November of 1895 that a Temple Library Society had been organized there to establish a free library and reading room.

Ferryboats plying the bay between the town and San Francisco were very much a part of Tiburon life. Largest and most magnificent was the James M. Donahue, named for the only son of Peter Donahue, the rail and ferry magnate.

WHEN THE Northwestern Pacific Railroad came into control, it retired the Donahue as too expensive to operate and bought a smaller steamer, the Requa. The Requa was burned to the waterline in 1911. But using the salvaged hull, the company rebuilt the vessel and christened her the Marin. She was put into service on the Sausalito-Tiburon line with a stop at Belvedere to take on and let off passengers, and continued to transport people for almost 30 years.

Dominating the Tiburon scene is old St. Hilary's Church, a quaint white frame building on a hilltop, built in 1888 on land given by Dr. Benjamin Lyford, and dedicated on Oct. 21 of that year.

St. Hilary's was at first a mission church with Catholic priests from St. Raphael's riding from San Rafael to Tiburon every other Sunday to say mass.

LATER THE old church became a mission of the Star of the Sea Parish in Sausalito.

Population growth on the peninsula resulted in the formation of St. Hilary's Parish, and the building of a new church on Hilary Drive in Tiburon where the first services were held in January of 1954.

The old church suffered at the hands of vandals until the Belvedere-Tiburon Landmarks Society, under the direction of Mrs. Robert Bastian, acquired the building and rededicated it as an historical monument and museum.

NEXT THE wildflowers that thrive on the hillside around the church were preserved with the aid of a $13,500 Open Space Land Program grant. The county obtained title to two acres as a conservation area.

At Tiburon's eastern edge is Keil Cove, a 38-acre estate that Russell Keil inherited from his uncle, Hugo Keil, who in turn had received the property from his father, David Keil who bought the land from Dr. Lyford.

With the building of the Golden Gate Bridge, more and more people from all parts of the Bay Area began coming to Tiburon to enjoy a day of watching the craft on the bay and to lunch or dine in the town's few restaurants.

THE NEW Boardwalk Shopping Center, developed in 1955, provided some new facilities, but Tiburon's Main Street remained a dreary huddle of buildings. A "paint-up, fix-up" campaign, begun by Mrs. Palmer Field and supported by the property owners, changed that remarkably. Old buildings were remodeled or repainted and new ones constructed in keeping with the changed appearance. Smart shops and new restaurants now greet Tiburon visitors.

With the incorporation of Tiburon, its citizens elected on June 2, 1964, as its first council members Anne L. Ellinwood, Fred C. Hannahs, John S. Hoffmire Jr., Leo Souza and Gordon W. Strawbridge.

It was noted that the new city included within its incorporated limits virtually all of Angel Island. Water transportation connects the mainland with the island, a state park and prime tourist attraction. And there is ferry service, as well, between Tiburon and San Francisco.

SCHOOLS AND churches are sources of great pride among the residents of the Tiburon Peninsula.

Mrs. Louise Teather, who has researched and written extensively upon the history of the area, gives this chronology for the development of the school system:

The Reed School District was established in 1874 and the Reed Ranch School was operated in an old house on Jefferson Drive in what is now Belveron West. There was a first class of 20 girls, 10 white boys and one Indian boy. John J. Reed, son of John T. Reed, was one of the original trustees.

IN 1887, THE Reed District divided and the southern portion took on the name of Tiburon School District. The first Tiburon School was a wing added to a building in the railroad yards. In 1901 the trustees purchased a building site lot from Dr. Lyford for $2,000, then considered "a very high price."

An 1896 note in the margin of the Register of School Trustees in the Marin County school superintendent's office reads:

"Belvedere School District was formed from the Tiburon District by the act of incorporation."

WHILE BELVEDERE had voted to incorporate in December, 1896, its official incorporation was not effective until July 1, 1897. Its new school building opened in 1901.

In 1921 the moving of one family, the Chans, with their five children from the pig ranch they operated on Paradise Drive forced the Reed District school to close because of too few pupils. It was annexed by the Belvedere District.

In 1950 the Reed Union School District was formed by joining the Belvedere and Tiburon districts and assuming the name of the area's first district.

THE PENINSULA is part of the Tamalpais Union High School District and its teenagers attended that district's high schools.

The Tiburon Peninsula is also home to a number of private and parochial schools including Marin Country Day School at the peninsula neck, begun in 1956; St. Hilary's Church School, started in 1963; and Belvedere Nursery School with its own building.

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, first established as a mission, was organized as a parish in 1951 and later built an impressive edifice. It, too, has a day school.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Christ, Scientist, completed its striking building opposite the Belvedere Community Hall in 1952.

The Westminister Presbyterian Church of Richardson Bay was established in 1956.

And in 1959, the Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary came to Strawberry Point at the entrance to the peninsula.

First record of a post office for the area concerned the one at Angel Island. But a joint Belveder-Tiburon postoffice now serves all residents of the peninsula.

A LINK WITH the region's colorful past is the old Victorian mansion of Dr. and Mrs. Benjamin Lyford which was brought by barge to land along the water's edge given by Rosie Verrall to the Richardson Bay Foundation and to the Marin Chapter of the National Audubon Society for a nature preserve that attracts visitors from near and far.

Today the peninsula is a site where on its shores beautiful residences and handsome apartment houses have replaced fishermen's cabins, where spacious ranches and vast estates have given way to modern housing developments with paved streets and utilities, where shopping centers occupy land that was once open and quite wild.

But both Belvedere and Tiburon also retain much of their past charm, Belvedere as a quietly luxurious residence center, Tiburon as a picturesque tourist mecca as well as a locale for comfortable homes.

Where once cattle grazed, vaqueros rode and litigants disputed the ownership of the land, today some 2,600 residents live in Belvedere and 5,974 in Tiburon, enjoying the good and modern life yet keenly aware of their roots with the past, as demonstrated by the vigilance and the foresight shown by the Belvedere-Tiburon Landmarks Society in preserving the remaining traces of that heritage.

COVERED bridges are supposed to be a thing of the past, on their way to extinction. But the one pictured at right, located near Eureka in California's Redwood Empire, is only a few months old. And its builders expect it to be around for at least a century. Privately built, the redwood span has been turned over to Humboldt County and officially made a part of the public road system. Already, it is a major tourist attraction for visitors to the area. And it is without challenge the youngest of the country's some 700 surviving covered bridges. (California Redwood Association photo)

Why A Covered Bridge At This Time?

Why would anyone want to build a covered bridge — a wooden one at that — in the freeway age of souped-up cars and uptight drivers?

To the flock of summertime visitors who visit the nation's newest "kissing bridge" near Eureka, Calif., its two builders explain that the question answers itself.

"We felt that there should be some quiet places where people can reflect on the past and forget about progress," says local contractor Earl R. Biehn.

THE QUIET MAY be short-lived. Curious visitors to the barn-red span across Jacoby Creek already have made it one of the most popular tourist attractions in Humboldt County, according to the Redwood Empire Association. Camera-clicking sightseers sometimes number more than 100 a day, outdrawing the tallest tree in the world located in Redwood National Park 40 miles to the north.

Biehn's partner, James Roscoe of Arcata, offers several other good reasons for building the wooden anachronism.

"Anything but a covered bridge would have seemed out of place in these surroundings," he says, waving an arm toward the once-logged forest of tall redwood trees that blanket the nearby hills.

THERE ARE PLENTY of fanciful reasons given for roofing bridges throughout the country, Roscoe claims, "and most of them are phoney." The spans were not housed to keep snow off the roadway nor to prevent horses from skittering at the sight of water below. Providing a place for lovers and shaping up passing loads of hay are other mythical excuses.

"The truth is," Roscoe asserts, "a covered bridge is stronger, cheaper to maintain, and lasts longer than many other types. The housing protects the wooden trusses and stringers from moisture and sun."

"And because we built this one of redwood," he continues, "there's no reason why it shouldn't last forever." Most of California's 11 other covered bridges, including the 98-year-old Paradise Park Bridge near Santa Cruz, are also redwood structures.

ROSCOE IS A civil engineer who always wanted to build a box bridge. The dream became reality after he read a recent book titled "Covered Bridges of the West," which mentioned that the Oregon State Highway Department still had building-specifications for what it unromantically called "housed, through-type timber truss structures."

After acquiring a set of plans, Roscoe added modifications and produced his own 66-foot-long Howe truss bridge.

Biehn and Roscoe are developers of a surrounding subdivision named Brookwood, but their bridge was not a money-making idea. It cost $8,000 more than a conventional steel or masonry bridge, the builders admit, and has been dedicated to free public use.

"The Brookwood Bridge is just another way of expressing our life style up here in northern redwood country," Biehn concludes. "We know that the building of one covered bridge — or even replacing the thousand that once dotted the West — won't slow down the hell-bent pace of modern living, but we hope that it will serve as a permanent reminder of more peaceful days."

Switzerland's City Of Scents

A visitor's first impression of Zurich, Switzerland, is its aromatic scent.

The first conclusion is to suspect that the area is filled with competitive perfume shops spraying samples of their wares into the air. But soon your sweetened senses discover that the magnificent flower boxes that adorn almost every apartment house window are releasing this tantalizing aroma.

Another distinguishing characteristic of Zurich is that it is a divided city — not in spirit but geographically.

THE LIMMAT River flows through the city. This has made it necessary for about half the city to use the Zurich bridges daily. Also, it has provided ideal waterfront locations for its growing suburbs.

Homes are fanned along the slopes of the Uetliberg and Zurichberg and far down into the valley of the Limmat, over to the Glatt Valley. These are housing development, Swiss style.

In most towns in the United States the major thoroughfare is generally called "Main Street." In Zurich it is the Bahnhofstrasse — a charming, tree-lined street with a succession of trams making their way past groups of casual jaywalkers.

THE BAHNHOFSTRASSE is often referred to as the Fifth Avenue of Europe. Actually the similarity ends with the favorable comparison of shopping facilities. This Zurich "Main Street" has some of the finest shops on the Continent, and runs from the railroad station to the lake. The sales girls are models of patience and courtesy.

Among the special buildings of Zurich worth seeing is the Romanesque Grossmunster Cathedral, one of the oldest places of worship in Switzerland. It was built about 1100 in honor of three patron saints of the city, Felix, Regula and Exuperantius, and according to legend, by Charlemagne.

On the South Tower there is a statue of Charlemagne.

THE HISTORIC Guild Houses are popular landmarks of Zurich. Many date back to the early 16th Century. They built as meeting halls for the various craftsmen of the city. Today, preserved in their original forms with armorial bearings, antique furnishings, tall tile stoves, they serve as restaurants popular with gourmets.

Historically Zurich has been one of the chief cultural centers of Switzerland. Its reputation for the practice of the fine arts attracted many famous figures.

Thomas Mann, escaping from the ferment of German politics, fled to Zurich. James Joyce found the lakeside walks inspirational and wrote a sizable portion of "Ulysses" there. He died in Zurich in January, 1941. Richard Wagner composed his opera "Tristan und Isolde" in Zurich; and Thornton Wilder wrote his best seller "Our Town" in Zurich.

Throughout the year there is the constant hum of concerts, opera and theater in Zurich. Opera and ballet are performed by international artists at the Stadttheater; classical and modern dramas at Schauspielhaus; concerts at the Tonhalle and Kursaal.

CAJUN NOT THE SAME AS CREOLE

"Cajun" and "Creole" foods are not the same, according to the Louisiana Tourist Commission.

Creole cuisine had a more refined origin, having been started by aristocratic Europeans who often brought their chefs with them to the New World. Cajun cookery began with French Acadian refugees who often lived far away from sources of imported ingredients and who therefore had to "make do" with readily available seasonings, vegetables and meats. Acadians are more likely to cook everything together in one pot, such as jambalaya, whereas Creole dishes feature sauces and gravies, as well as respective courses, served separately.

Cajun foods are lustier, more heavily seasoned. Creole dishes are lighter, more delicately flavored.

Biography Of An Author Who Was The Victim Of Bad Timing

NATHANIEL WEST: THE ART OF HIS LIFE by Jay Martin; Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 419 pages, $10. Reviewed by Marji Parr.

Reviews Of New Reading

Nathaniel West had bad timing. He started his career as an author with the depression . . . release of his primer in angst, "Miss Lonelyhearts," was thwarted because of an economic trick . . . his anti-war play debuted just months after America was no longer anti-war . . . then, when he'd arrived as a money-making Hollywood writer, married to a woman who gloriously filled his needs, he failed to heed a stop sign.

Jay Martin, a young University of California (Irvine) professor, has traced the short unhappy life of one of the century's most promising writers, in a fascinating biography that interweaves his story against a consciousness of the times when West lived. The book's title is apparently a play on a previous biography by Martin: "Conrad Aiken; A Life of His Art."

The history starts with a pre-womb tour of West's background. His Jewishness is spelled out: The parents who struggled for triumph over poverty to educate the children. Achieve, achieve. His mother, Anna Wallenstein, was destined never to understand an artistic kind of success.

Nicknamed Pep because he lacked it. West had a personal incapacity for real involvements, turning this flaw into advantage in his fiction, in which he "tended both to elevate and to mock his first-person, fictive surrogate." He was, contrary to his friend and mentor, Scott Fitzgerald, on the side of intellect against the emotions, on the side of the brain against the heart. Pity and horror would be his themes; and his art, at its best, that of ironic tragedy.

W.H. Auden defined "West's disease" as a spiritual illness. During the depression, when many writers and economic analysts dramatized the sheer material misery, West measured the malady of the soul. It was a "disease of consciousness which renders it incapable of converting wishes into desires."

Nevertheless, he wrote and rewrote, tightened and condensed while he served his time as night clerk in his family's hotel. At an age when intellectuals favored Communism because it seemed more concerned with people than property (they would dearly pay for this youthful idealism two decades later), West had only a casual interest. He was too busy being a novelist.

Inevitably he went to Hollywood and worked for "Repulsive" Studios, a job he tossed off mechanically, without draining creative juices. He joined the other serious writers in Lotusland who turned their frustration toward gathering material for a book exposing the local grotesqueries. West's was of course "The Day of the Locust, " his favorite work, and perhaps the best fiction ever written on Hollywood.

West affected fellow writers " as Bogart did actors, with his reserve and rock-like integrity." He drew strength from such colleagues as William Saroyan, Fitzgerald, Budd Schulberg, and Marin author Alvah Bessie, also a persecuted scenario jockey at that time.

The saddest time in West's 37 years was his first siege in Hollywood when, sick and broke, he was supported by his friend and brother-in-law, S.J. Perelman. Within a few years he pulled himself up screenland's slimy ladder to a financial respectability. But his experiences with love had to this point been painful, both emotionally and physically. Then he met Ruth McKenney's sister Eileen, portrayed on the stage four days after her death.

A sunny ingenue the real Eileen was not. But it developed that the qualities that had made her unhappy single would now make her a good wife. She had " great compassion and concern, a tenderness for other's egos, and sexual know-how." The enormity of her need resolved West's loneliness. And, in turn, she, as Budd Schulberg noted, "was an outgoing girl who refused to accept the Pep that we knew" and broke down his social reserve. West adored seeing her blossom; liked playing father to her small son.

Then, the last weekend before Christmas in 1940, the Wests set off for a hunting trek into Mexico.

On Friday they had been uncertain about whether to go. The weather was bad and there was shopping to do. But it was a good trip. They were returning Sunday with the legal limit of game in the car. West, as famous for his absurd driving as for his fine writing, daydreamed beyond a stop sign.

At the time of the fatal crash, Eileen's watch said 2:55, Dec. 22, 1940.

The Strategy And The Tactics Of A Political Comeback

THE RESURRECTION OF RICHARD NIXON by Jules Witcover; G. P. Putnam's Sons, 479 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Bob Raab.

In November, 1962, Richard Nixon was defeated in the California governorship race by incumbent Edmund G. Brown. The morning of his loss Nixon delivered a TV tirade against newsmen: "You won't have Richard Nixon to kick around anymore." He then stalked away, seemingly to political oblivion.

Newsman Jules Witcover begins here the saga of an astounding political rebirth. First off, according to Witcover, Nixon molded himself into the "new Nixon" by steeling himself to restraint in speech and action. Quietly, cautiously, he moved back into politics in 1963 by helping Republican fund-raising throughout the land. His appearances helped win many Congressional seats for Republicans in 1966 and earned the gratitude of hundreds of party leaders who were influential at local and state levels.

Nixon received the 1968 Republican nomination on the basis of delegate strength built during the mid-60s.

The 1964 split between Goldwater and liberal/moderate Republicans tempted Nixon almost fatally to become a candidate. It was his one near slip during these years, but it was abscured by other events.

Nixon strategy for the 1968 Republican candidacy for President was to let George Romney defeat himself by talking ineffectually, and to isolate Nelson Rockefeller by pointing up the New Yorker's failure to support the party. It worked. Romney fell off, Rockefeller had little grass-roots support.

The campaign against Humphrey was one of caution — as befits a frontrunner. But the last-minute announcement by President Lyndon B. Johnson of Paris peace talks almost won the election for Humphrey.

These events are grist for Witcover's look behind the curtain.

The portrait of Nixon is not dramatically new. He is pictured as primarily devoted to advancing Richard Nixon's political fortunes. Tenacity, political astuteness and evasiveness are his characteristics.

The author's major charge against Nixon is dissembling during the 1968 campaigns. Witcover claims Nixon failed to inform the people about specifics re Vietnam, civil rights, economic policy and urban problems. Instead, Nixon "made an end run" around the press corps and its probing questions on these matters in order to speak bland generalities during carefully orchestrated local and regional television panel shows.

Grudgingly, Witcover admits that Nixon outwitted the press by giving the appearance of campaigning in person while actually utilizing television to win the election. Witcover concedes that newsmen covering presidential candidates, especially Republicans, tend to play too rough. He credits Romney's demise to heated statements made in response to constant aggravation by caustic newsmen.

"Resurrection" is worth the reading aside from any pain or pleasure we derive from one more recounting of the strength and weaknesses of Nixon. Witcover has documented the myriad parts of a political campaign. Strategy is central to successful campaigning and Witcover explains it and understands it as well as any writer we have read. He knows that strategy is using people effectively and the book is full of prominent names viewed behind the scenes being used and abused for the sake of strategy.

Gov. John Connally recently issued a heated denial to Witcover's contention that Connally made a deal with Nixon, later reneged, to deliver Texas in exchange for a cabinet position. (Texas went to Humphrey by a tiny margin.)

Witcover is dismayed by the direction presidential campaigns are turning. Television studios are a poor substitute, he writes, for auditoriums and stadiums . . . flesh-and-blood appearances. He doesn't make clear how a candidate 400 feet away on a podium delivering a canned speech is revealing more of himself than a candidate 10 feet away on a picture tube, also delivering a canned speech.

What Parents Should Know If Narcotic Problem Arises

WHAT YOU CAN DO ABOUT DRUGS AND YOUR CHILD by Herman Land; Hart, 240 pages, softcover, $2.45. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Here is a book with unfortunate but urgent contemporary application.

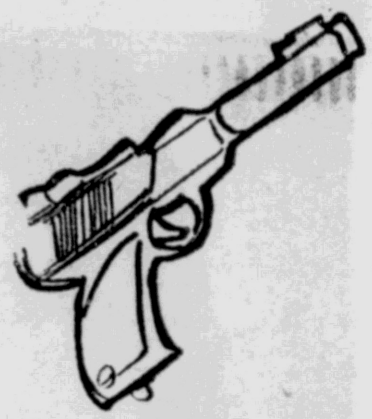
Land, a parent who admits to being a non-expert, but who has picked the brains and the writings of many experts, has written a book of concrete, practical advice for the parent concerned about the inroads drugs have made into the society in which their children must move.

Chapters on "How Drug Abusers Get Started" and "How to Spot the Use of Drugs" will, alone, answer many of the questions of worried parents.

Land differentiates between the various drugs, between "hard" users and experimenters, etc. He spells out the most effective verbal approach for the parent when the problem appears. And he discusses, too, both preventive and curative measures.

Dr. Henry Brill of the New York State Narcotics Control Commission in his foreword praises Land's work for its repeated emphasis "that where there seems to be a drug problem, the situation requires realistic attitudes. The situation can be made worse by panic . . ., by lack of understanding, by indecisiveness and by uncritical acceptance of prevalent notions . . . The material is factual, is valid, is succint, and is presented in laymen's language."

Sleuths & Suspense



ENQUIRY by Dick Francis; Harper & Row, 219 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Donald G. Davis.

Here is another standout suspense story by Dick Francis. His fans will not be disappointed.

Hughes is barred from the track. This means he is a nobody, disgraced and slapped down. And it means he must move because he lives at a stable. It also is worse than an insult because the whole business is a fraud. Hughes has been framed. He must prove it and prove it fast to save not only own face and livelihood but that of others.

So it is from this disaster that Hughes recovers in a painful and frustrating search for the truth. Francis' story takes on momentum, carefully plotted to suspenseful climax that finds Hughes seeing the light at the end of the tunnel — and in that light death staring him in the face.

YOUNG MAN, I THINK YOU'RE DYING, by Joan Fleming; G.P. Putnam's Sons, 192 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Rachel Farrara.

Joan Fleming can be depended upon to write unusual stories, unusually well. Her characters are consistently real, always interesting and often amusing.

Young Joe Bogey is a sympathetic character, even though he allows himself to be led around by a sly schemer, W. Sledge, a friend since they were schoolboys together. Joe has ambitions and realizes he can only succeed through hard work; he can't help but admire the easy money that Sledge always seems to have. Sledge implicates Joe from time to time, using Joe as chauffeur as he steals, and Joe enjoys the extra money he gains. He draws the line at murder, however, when Sledge loses his head one night and strangles a widow who surprises him in the midst of his robbery.

The ins and outs of this novel are intriguing. Joe's relationships with his parents and a young runaway, Frances Smith, are finely drawn and humorous, despite the grim predicament in which he finds himself.

The conclusion is swift and neatly done; the reader is sure it could not have ended any other way.

THE CHARLOTTE ARMSTRONG READER by Charlotte Armstrong; Coward-McCann, 501 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

The death of Charlotte Armstrong was a major loss to suspense novel fans, for she was among the two or three very best at contemporary tales of Gothic-tinged terror and menace.

In all she produced 26 such novels, a number of which rated among the finest of the genre.

Her fans can relive the excitement of three of those stories in this omnibus. Coward-McCann has put together, with preface by Alice Cromie, a collection that covers 20 years in her career.

The three novels are "The Unsuspected" (1945) that first earned her national attention and which was made into a first-rate suspense movie: "A Dram of Poison" (1956) that won her an Edgar and remains one of her most original and surprising novels, and "The Turret Room" (1965) that was perhaps her finest of more recent years.

Strong on atmosphere and character, clever with her plots, Miss Armstrong was unfailingly bewitching and entertaining. These three are all classics of their kind.

Bible For The Barbecuer And For The Camper-Outer

THE COMPLETE OUTDOOR COOKBOOK By Dan and Inez Morris; Hawthorn, 372 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Maxine Keown.

Here's a little "bible" for the barbecuer, a big book jammed with recipes and helpful information. It is a really impressive compendium, intended for both the backyard chef and the "camper-outer."

The recipes — there are several hundred of them — range from Many-Colored Cole Slaw to Sweet Potato Surprise, from Tomato Soup Spice Cake to Fish with Caraway Seeds, from Salmon and Flounder in Mushroom Soup to Standing Rib Roast on a Spit. Naturally, there's an abundance of steak, burger and chicken variations.

But perhaps outshining the recipes is the more general advice these two experienced outdoors people offer their readers — guidance in the selection of equipment and utensils, instructions on starting the fire (beware of fluids and jellies), the storage of food, etc.

There's a special chapter on cooking on boats, and another on foraging for food and water. And the book touches on such diverse subjects as nutrition and the loading of the car for the camping trip.

Armed with "The Complete Outdoor Cookbook" you might find yourself tackling such things as Whole, Unstuffed Chickens in Orange-Lemon Sauce the next time you fire up the barbecue.

ESP: Has It Been Proven? And A Manual Of Black Arts

By DON KEOWN

Research has established parapsychology beyond argument as an independent branch of science, in the opinion of Dr. Milan Ryzl, the Czech-born San Diego State College educator known for his ESP experimentations.

It is, he admits in his book, "Parapsychology: A Scientific Approach," still in its infancy, for the most part "a mere collection of strange observations."

But findings to date are sufficient to justify the acceptance of its existence, he believes, so that "today parapsychologists need not spend time offering new proofs of ESP."

Rather, scientists should concentrate upon determining the nature of extra-sensory perception and other psychic phenomena.

"This faculty (ESP) . . . exists," he declares, " and must be investigated."

Ryzl is eager that he and his colleagues press on with efforts to determine the makeup and the theories by which ESP functions. So far, he says, the surface barely has been scratched.

To date, he says, this pioneering work has given us a few clues. Clairvoyance, telepathy and precognition all seem to be different forms of the same ability, ESP. And ESP, in turn, seems to be related closely to psychokinesis, or the psycho phenomena of producing mechanical effects by purley mental effort.

The proof of psychokinesis, says Ryzl, is somewhat less apparent than the proof of extrasensory perception. But it too, he argues, is supported by the evidence.

Indications are that ESP, "however imperfectly," is widespread among the human population and not restricted to an exceptional, gifted few, according to Dr. Ryzl. The extraverted, expansive, well-adjusted, free of neurotic traits seem to be the most responsive. But more important is the attainment of a specific, relaxed, rather dreamy state of mind.

The theory of telepathy remains a mystery, Ryzl admits, but adds: "We must admit that telepathy is a transmission of some signals carrying information . . . necessarily of an energetic nature . . . but entirely different from known forms of energy."

Ryzl analyzes several suggested theories, none of them very satisfactory.

"If we want to incorporate parapsychological phenomena into the scheme of other processes in the universe, we must be bold enough to depart radically from the established lines of reasoning," he maintains. "Such revolutionary phenomena as ESP and PK call for revolutionary theories of explanation."

And he adds: "Apparently we are heading toward the finding that our 'physical' universe is only a part of a more extensive reality whose other parts may be accessible to our observation through parapsychic phenomena — the finding that the system we use to describe events in our world is able to comprise only a part of this reality." In other words, he says, "a super universe" in which the old contradiction between "matter" and "spirit" evaporates.

PARAPSYCHOLOGY: A SCIENTIFIC APPROACH by Dr. Milan Ryzl; Hawthorn, 216 pages, $7.95.

MASTERING WITCHCRAFT by Paul Huson; Putnam's, 256 pages, $6.95.

But this, he admits, is only speculation, as are the future applications of parapsychology he foresees in medical diagnosis, police work and education.

Dr. Ryzl's detailed reports on research and experimentation with psychic phenomena make fascinating reading even if one does not feel the case for ESP and PK yet so clearly proven as he asserts it to be.

There is no doubting the doctor's credentials or the sincerity of his beliefs. And his argument is persuasive even if not overwhelmingly convincing. Certainly he has demonstrated a justification for proceeding with the more particularlized, more probing kind of research he feels to be in order. Mankind is presently squandering vast sums and great manpower upon endeavors that are not nearly so promising.

NOW, PAUL Huson, the young author of "Mastering Witchcraft," is something else.

Close study of his photograph on the back of the book's jacket shows no indication of his tongue being in cheek. But "A Practical Guide for Witches, Warlocks and Covens?" The guy just has to be kidding.

If so, it is a most elaborate and well executed put-on. With Tolkien-like thoroughness, Huson has woven from legend, lore and history a most amazing fabric. A whole nether-world for creatures of the occult.

With utmost seriousness, he outlines the techniques and the secrets of the practitioners of the black arts, complete with rituals, incantations, curses, runes, tools, costumes, recipes and other apparatus.

The reader discovers that the profession of witchery is a most demanding and most exacting one — and also, in many respects, a perilous one.

Of course, Huson couldn't really be serious about all this. Or could he?

Maybe we'd better take another look at that photograph. He did appear to be smiling just a bit. Or was that only the faraway look of a warlock considering some coven or pondering some magic?

"Mastering Witchcraft" makes intriguing reading, whether or not one is open to recruitment.

MARGARET FARRAR, former crossword puzzle editor of the New York Times, has put together volume No. 8 in her "The Pocket Book of Crossword Puzzles" series. The publisher: Pocket Books, naturally. The price: 60 cents. The puzzles: medium hard, difficult enough to be interesting, but easy enough not to be frustrating. Each puzzle has its own theme, to add to the fun.

MORRIE TURNER, a hit with Independent-Journal readers and a hit across the country with his "Wee Pals" comic strip, has another collection of his rib-ticklers reprinted in paperback by the New American Library. The Signet book recording the philosophizing and antics of Oliver, Randy, Sybil, et al is filled with gentle humor and no small amount of social significance.

CANCER must rank with dope, rioting and war as among the words that arouse the greatest dread in contemporary society. And none is fully understood, as to cause or consequence. Dr. Maurice Sutton tries to dispell some of the mystery surrounding cancer in his booklet "Cancer Explained" (Hart Publishing Co., 92 pages, softcover, $1.45). Its primary aim is to encourage early detection of the ailment, when it is most susceptible to cure. And, secondarily, to eliminate needless worry abut cancer which is more rampant than the disease. "Being on the lookout for cancer is very much a personal affair," says the doctor, and he tells you how to go about it.

THE LITERARY Guild's double selection for August is "Five Patients: The Hospital Explained" by Dr. Michael Crichton, and "Going All the Way," a novel by Dan Wakefield.

TWO OF Evan S. Connell Jr.'s novels, "Mr. Bridge" and "Mrs. Bridge," are on the recent list of Crest paperback reprints from Fawcett, as is Chaim Potok's "The Promise."

On The Stereo Scene—

Melanie—A Youthful Reincarnation Of The Immortal Lotte Lenya

By JOHN SUNIER

Melanie Safka is a beautifully wistful-looking, slightly chubby 23-year-old who lives in New York, is on a health food and astrology kick like lots of other young people today, writes and sings her own special little songs, and I think I'm in love with her.

It's her voice — an amazing reincarnation of the youthful Lotte Lenya of "Three-Penny Opera" fame.

Melanie (she prefers to use only her first name) communicates the tenderness, understanding yet world-weariness of a woman who has Been-Through-It-All. (At 23?)

Her three albums to date are all on the Buddah Records label (Born to Be — BDS 5024, Melanie — BDS 5041, Candles in the Rain — BD 5060)

I'd suggest the middle one for a starter. It features the really great "Beautiful People," as well as the touching "Tuning My Guitar," and the invitation any red-blooded guy would jump to act upon, "Take me Home With You." The first LP contains her first hit, "I'm Back in Town," plus the zany "Animal Crackers" which certainly can't be part of Melanie's natural foods diet.

The big plug number on the third album is a joint venture with the Edwin Hawkins Singers, "Lay Down." It doesn't quite come off and Melanie is straining to be heard above the choir. Better are "Alexander Beetle" (words by A.A. Milne) and Melanie's unique version of "Carolina on My Mind." The arrangements for all the tunes are uniformly tasteful and supportive of Melanie's voice.

"Play this album real loud" is the instruction of the Flamin Groovies, another San Francisco rock group, in their second LP (Kama Sutra KSBS 2021). The Groovies specialize in their own re-creation of 1950's rock'n' roll. It's simple, gutsy, direct and damn the torpedoes.

"She's Falling Apart" is a satire on the Beatles' "She's Leaving Home."

"WOODSTOCK" is a terrific film experience, even if it is overpriced.

The three-record soundtrack set (Cotillion SD3-500) will preserve the memory of the film for many, but better versions of most of the tunes are available elsewhere. The reproduction is not up to studio standards by any means, and some of the performances fall flat too, especially those of the then-inexperienced Crosby, Stills, Young & Nash.

High points of the album for this writer were Joan Baez's "Joe Hill," Country Joe and The Fish's "Fish Cheer," Joe Cocker's "With a Little Help from My Friends," and Jimi Hendrix' amazing "Star Spangled Banner."

There is too much Sly & the Family Stone, good as the group was, and how Ten Years After got into the film at all I'll never know. They are the lowest of flashy, pandering imitation and exaggeration.

The packaging of the three-fold album is worthy of mention for its excellent design.

I'VE ONLY JUST received the last two Beatles albums and Paul's effort, so my apologies for a late assessment. Just in case somebody out there hasn't picked up on all three, they're winners of course.

The "Hey Jude" LP (Apple SW-385) brings Beatles fans good stereo versions of "Paperback Writer," "Lady Madonna" and "Ballad of John and Yoko," as well as the title hit. I was surprised at the several tunes from the first Beatles film "Hard Day's Night."

I guess that soundtrack was on United Artists and this was Apple's chance to get in there too.

"Let It Be" didn't sound like the greatest experience in cinema, so I missed it, but the soundtrack, cleaned up and rebalanced by Phil Spector, is most enjoyable.

"I Dig a Pony," "I Me Mine," "Get Back," "The Long and Winding Road," and the title tune are already gems in the Beatles catalog of tunes. The informality and excitement of the live recording situation comes through well and provides a welcome change from the highly-produced Beatles numbers of late. (Apple AR 34001).

MELANIE SAFKA
She prefers the first name

"McCARTNEY" (Apple STAO 3363) is the title of Paul's solo flight. It maintains a very high standard and is full of the gorgeous melodic gift that McCartney has. Naming favorites is almost impossible: "That Would be Something," "Man We Was Lonely," "Oo You," "Maybe I'm Amazed" . . . the list could easily include all 14 tracks.

The liner says all instruments and voices are by Paul, and with the full sound on many tracks, that really is something!

Tremendous with stereo headsets for those on a head trip.

SOME NEW BOOKS FOR THE JUNIORS

The Art For Children Series of books from Doubleday and Co. represents a diferent approach to presenting and interpreting the work of the masters for juniors, and it promises to be most effective.

Ernest Raboff, critic, dealer and himself an artist, is doing the series, and has succeeded remarkably well in making his text informative and incisive while avoiding the highblown and pedantic that might very well "turn off" the youngsters.

The reproduced artwork is beautifully depicted in color and skilfully chosen for its child-appeal.

The texts are related in a special handprinting that makes for easy reading and which also should be particularly pleasing to young eyes.

The first three books in the series to reach this desk: Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec," "Pierre-Auguste Renoir" and "Henri Rousseau," each priced at $3.95, each splendidly done, each capturing nicely the special attributes of the painter discussed and making those qualities meaningful to the young viewer.

Some other new books for the juniors:

"My Kangaroo Phoebe" (Hill & Wang, $3,95) by Hans Limmer, originally in German, is distinguished by the appealing photographs of Lies Wiegman. It is a simple story of one lad's friendship with a baby kangaroo at the town zoo that includes a visit to school and some anxious minutes when little Phoebe is missing for a time. Needless to say, Phoebe is wonderfully photogenic, and boys and girls should find the book, part of a new Terra Magica Series, irresistible.

Halloween isn't too far off now, making "Ghosts and Spirits of Many Lands" (Doubleday, $4.50) edited by Freya Littledale a timely collection. It is an anthology of spooky stories that have delighted and frightened the youngsters of countries as unlike as England and the Congo, China and the Argentine. The pages are filled with goblins and demons with a talking skull thrown in. Appropriately dark wood engravings by Stefan Martin contribute to the shivers.

"The Uproar" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Doris Orgel, with soft, delicate artwork by Anita Lobel, is a fantasy excursion for the youngster, telling about how a child's misinterpretation of one adult word can set off a whole chain of imaginative events. It is an attractive and meaningful book to adult eyes. But one wonders if the child might not find the story a mite confusing.

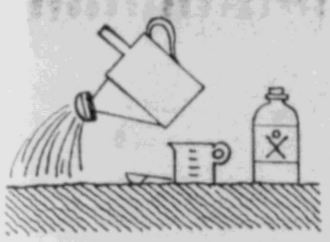
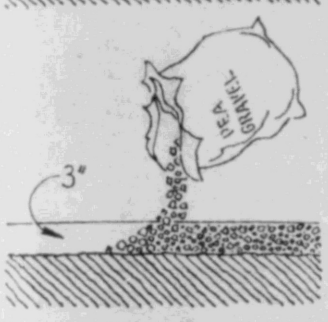
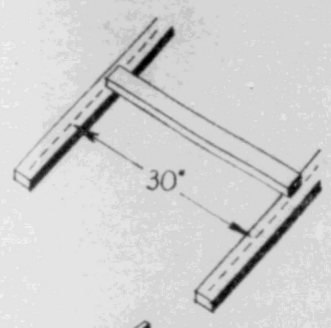
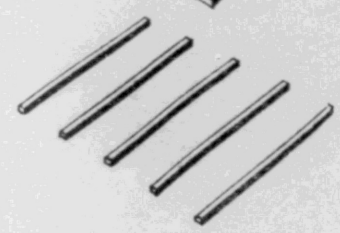
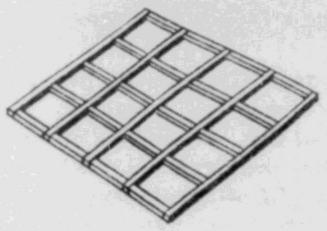
A Parquet Pattern For The Patio

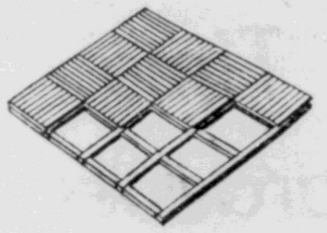


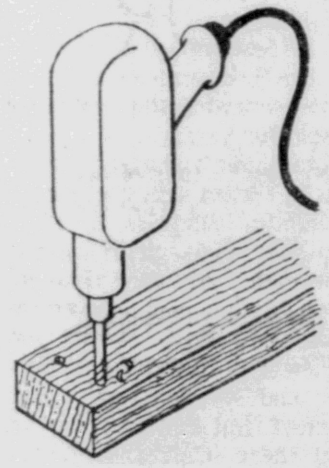












Here's How To Construct A Floor From Redwood

To construct a 10-by-10-foot redwood parquet patio floor:

1. Preparation of the ground is necessary if the patio is not already paved with a layer of concrete or similar material. If the area to be paved with redwood decking is soil, all vegetation should be removed and a chemical soil sterilant applied to prevent regrowth.

2. On a non-paved area, a three inch depth of sand or pea gravel will prove beneficial for drainage and will help inhibit weed growth. However, a flat, tamped soil surface that drains well can prove satisfactory as a base for laying a built-up redwood floor.

3. Although the foundation of the deck will not be visible (except for the perimeter edges) after the parquet decking is laid, the foundation grid must be constructed with precision. It must be carefully measured so that the 30 inch two-by-four decking will rest on two-by-four rails placed with 30 inch centers. An exception to this measurement is the perimeter of the grid where the 30-inch decking must extend beyond the center to be flush with the outside edges of the two-by-four rail foundation. This variation is achieved by marking, sawing, and placing the short, connecting rails in accordance with the deck plan dimensions shown.

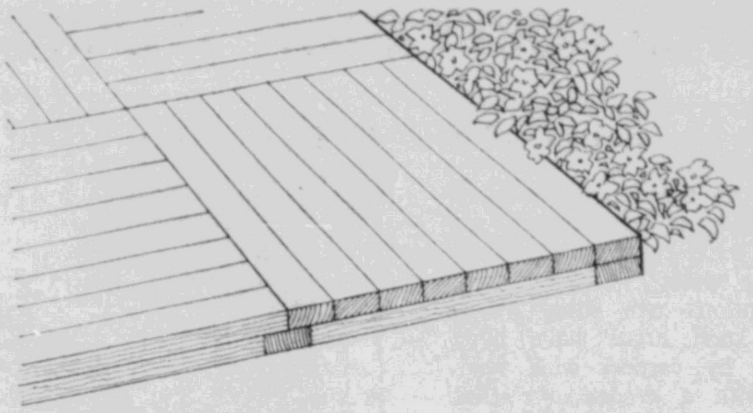
4. Use at least construction heart grade redwood to form the 10 foot square foundation grid. Lay five 10-foot rails parallel on the ground with intervals of 26⅜ inches between the three middle rails, and intervals of 24-9/16 inches between these and the perimeter rails. Saw ten 26⅜-inch rails, and ten 24 9/16-inch rails and insert them between the 10 foot rails at the above described spacing intervals to form a grid. Use a carpenter's square to prove that all corners are at right angles and toenail the rails together using size 8d nails* .

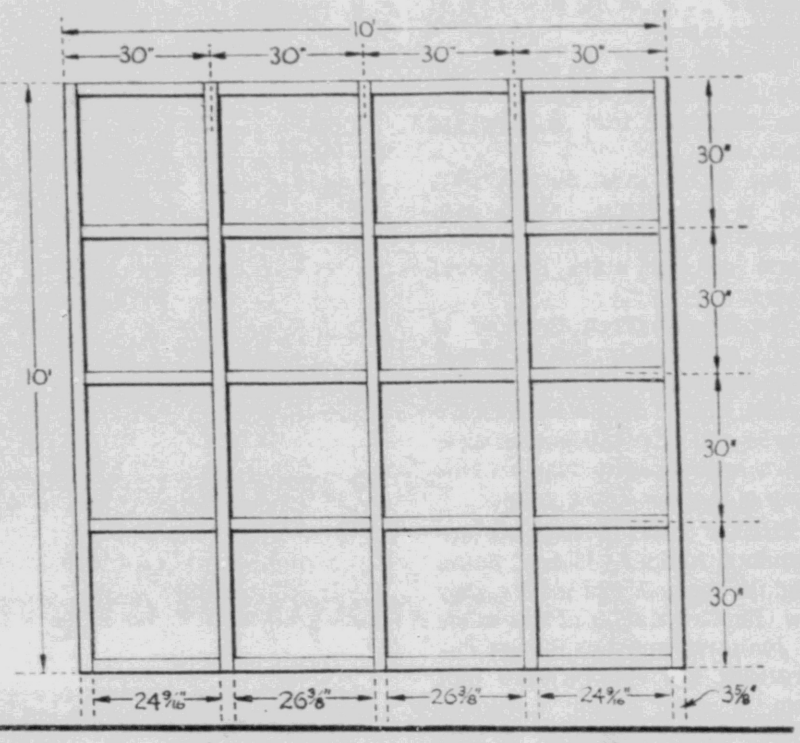
5. Now lay the decking using 128 clear all heart redwood two-by-fours, each 30 inches long. Lay out the entire floor area. Each of the 11 squares of the grid should be covered with eight parallel two-by-fours spaced approximately one-eighth of an inch apart (about the thickness of a 16d nail) to allow for drainage. The parquet pattern is achieved by laying the decking pieces of each 30-inch square at right angles to the adjacent square.

6. To avoid cracking or splitting of the ends of the decking material when nailing, it is advisable to predrill two nail holes at each end of each piece. Then nail the decking to the foundation using size 16d non-corroding nails.

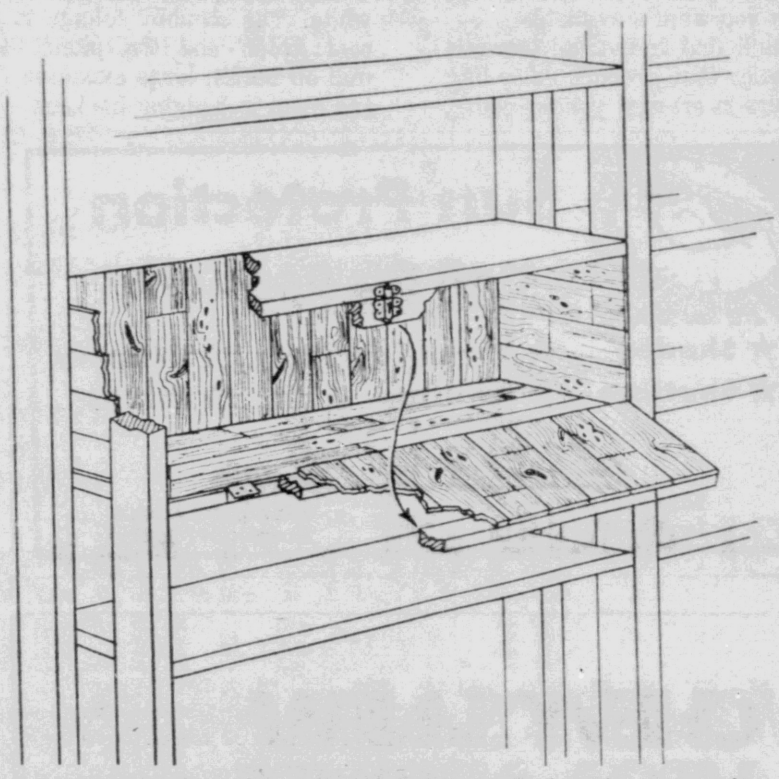
* To prevent staining of redwood by nails, use only non-corroding nails: stainless steel, aluminum, or high quality, hot-dipped galvanized.

For information on exterior redwood finishes, write to Dept. DB, California Redwood Association, 617 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Calif., 94111.





Handyman's Page



A BASEMENT, utility room or garage cedar closet can be built at low, low cost by enclosing existing shelves with aromatic red cedar wood. This usually open shelving consists of lumber or plywood pieces supported by wood or metal legs. Such a common, home-made storage system lends itself to a cedar-lined enclosure. As shown in the accompanying illustration, the home craftsman can easily use the narrow red cedar boards, which are tongue and grooved on their edges and ends, to make a six sided enclosure. The boards simply are nailed to the wood supports, as shown, or in some cases directly to the shelf edges and ends. In addition, the underside of the upper shelf and the surface of the lower shelf should be covered, too. The idea is to get the strongest possible aroma of cedar, which moths and their larvae detest. A cedar-lined door, hinged at the bottom, can be made by nailing the joined cedar boards to one-by-two-inch lumber along their edges. To make tight corners where the cedar boards meet, miter the outer edges of the corner boards. A few dollars spent on a simple project like this can provide the homemaker an ideal place for storing youngsters' galoshes, sports gear, scarves, sweaters and the like. Clothing put here won't be crowding closets in the bedrooms.

There's Nothing Like Bookshelf Beside Your Favorite Armchair

When you settle into your favorite reading corner, what better aid than your own chairside bookshelves, big enough to hold both current reading and old favorites, yet small enough to be moved from room to room?

The pattern is simple.

Upright boards 10 inches wide at each end and two rows of right-angled V-type shelves between. It can be scaled to fit beside your chair.

Twenty-four inches is a handy module for both height and length, with end pieces 10 inches wide and V-shelves either right-angled one by sixes or a one by eight for the back and one by six for the "seat," right-angled again, of course, to cradle books.

The shelving should be firmly nailed to hold the weight, and nails countersunk. Nail holes should be filled after the wood is stained.

Hollowed out quarter-round makes good handles, but hinged or fixed hardware may be used.

Some may prefer to adapt the lower shelf to accommodate magazines and newspapers.

Any western wood is well suited to this type of project. Decorative cutouts in the end pieces between the shelves may be added.

Don't Throw Away Old Card Table

Don't throw away an old card table because of a worn top.

Just cover it with a panel of Royalcote Marbletone, a thin hardboard with the appearance of travertine marble. It can be found at most lumber yards.

Lightly bevel the edges with a file and attach with all-purpose adhesive. Then, apply a clear, waterproof varnish to protect the surface against spillage.

For Hard-To-Reach, Hard-To-Water Spots

TRAILING ROSEMARY is an excellent selection as a groundcover for the far reaches of the garden or yard that are difficult to water. It boasts a lovely sage green foliage and is covered with small blue flowers through much of the warm season. Despite its beauty, it is rugged and will survive when many other plantings wilt and die. There are other groundcover possibilities that are equally hardy. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

This is the time of year when summer has taken its toll of Marin lawns.

Bare or brown spots are all too apparent, particularly in those hard-to-reach, hard-to-water spots.

Exceptions are those yards where such areas have been planted by owners with foresight with a groundcover that requires little or no attention or maintenance.

THERE ARE A number of groundcovers to be found in Marin nurseries that qualify for such use.

One of the most durable covers is Baccharis, which has grown in popularity in many parts of our state in recent years.

The bright green spreader is used extensively on freeway landscapes and is a good garden choice, too. The tooth-like leaves and many branches create a handsome texture on this deep green, prostrate grower.

THERE ARE A host of outstanding Junipers to use. Some hug the ground and others stay low. Representative of this class of Junipers, and the foliage colorations, are the varieties San Jose, a sage green; Compact Pfitzer Juniper, a dark green; Wilton's Carpet, silver blue; and Silver Spreader, a juniper with silver-green foliage.

Blooming groundcovers for difficult spots? There are several, and your nurseryman can show you what's available.

You'll find individual Gazania varieties that produce daisy-like flowers in orange, yellow, white, red, pink and coppery-orange. The Trailing Gazania has lovely gray foliage and a profusion of yellow blooms.

TRAILING AFRICAN Daisy is another flowering choice.

The two-inch size blooms change from lilac hue to an off white. The shrubby foliage is a cool green and the plants do well on banks, large expanses — and even in hanging baskets.

Now Is Hibiscus-Planting Time For Beauty-Conscious Gardener

In all except the coldest areas of Marin County, you can plant Hibiscus now and assure yourself some spectacular blooms in the future.

This evergreen plant is one of the showiest flowering shrubs to be seen in California. There are a couple dozen varieties, in luscious colors and differing flower forms that adorn the plants throughout the summer months.

GROWTH HABIT may be dense and dwarfish or loose and open. The different glossy foliage textures and varying growth habits are used effectively by landscape designers to achieve distinctive effects in today's gardens.

With architectural emphasis being placed on interior and exterior colors in today's homes, the Hibiscus is often relied upon to provide and perpetuate color harmony in the garden. They accomplish this admirably — the flowers range in color from white through pink to red, from yellow and apricot to orange.

The plants can be used as a flowering screen for privacy, and are ideal as shrubs in the foundation planting near the house — or in raised beds.

HIBISCUS IS a good plant for growing in tubs; certain varieties are also available in tree form.

Hibiscus plants like good drainage. This can be provided by any of several ready-to-use organic preparations your nurseryman can recommend. Give Hibiscus liberal amounts of water — don't let the roots stand in water, though.

The plants need sun, heat, and protection from frost. In cool coastal gardens it's necessary to plant against a warm southern wall where heat is trapped — in both summer and winter.

TO KEEP MATURE plants growing vigorously, prune out about one-third of the old wood in early spring — after the danger of frost has passed. Pinching-out tip growth of stems in spring and summer will produce more blooms.

As to feeding, your nurseryman can recommend the type food to use and outline a feeding schedule for you.

If you haven't shopped for Hibiscus in recent years, you have a delightful surprise in store when you visit your nearby nurserymen. At this time of year you'll find container-grown specimens in bloom so that you can view the flower forms and colors, and see the beauty and enjoyment that can be yours by having these California favorites in your garden.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

The Marin gardeners' checklist for the coming week:

✔ While deep and regular watering is essential to a healthy lawn this time of the year, be sure you do that watering in the morning. Watering in the late afternoon or evening invites fungus. Which may be the reason for those brown spots showing up in the lawn.

✔ And if your lawn hasn't had a summer feeding, apply a fertilizer now. Your nurseryman can specify the proper lawn food for the type of turf you have.

✔ Dahlias should be watered regularly and deeply. Make certain tall plants are staked. Otherwise, they will topple under the weight of their blooms.

✔ Even though we are deep into summer, it is still wise to bait for snails. Persistence pays off in the war against these pests.

✔ Give your roses a feeding to encourage an abundant autumn bloom.

✔ Plant groundcovers now. Fall and winter rains will help them get established, so that they will fill in more quickly next spring.

Lights At Night Show Off Trees

"I think that I shall never see A poem lovely as a tree . . ."

When Joyce Kilmer wrote his poem he doubtless was expressing his impressions of a tree as seen in the daytime.

More and more, however, people today are appreciating the beauty of trees after sunset. This is made possible by the imaginative use of electric lights.

SUCH LIGHTING not only can show off the beauty of an already beautiful tree, but also it can be used to bring out the best points and conceal the poor ones of a just-ordinary-looking tree.

For the average homeowner an effective lighting job requires only two or three 150-watt PAR-38 spot and flood lamps. These are made of hard glass, and resist breakage due to rain. The bulbs should be installed in a fixture which directs the light where you want it and hides the bulb from direct view.

You can light the tree as a focal point in your yard, as a background for flowers and shrubbery, or as a canopy over your garden or terrace. The type of tree, its size and location, and the effect you desire, will help determine the lighting plan.

TO MAKE THE tree the center of attraction you should light it from two or three directions, with more light from one side than the other. This develops the tree's three-dimensional character.

A subtle lighting effect can be achieved by directing the light vertically from the tree's base, so that it grazes the trunk and passes through the branches and leaves. Trees with open branching also can be lighted from within, as from the tree's crotch.

CONCEALED lighting can make a specimen tree even more beautiful at night than it is in the daylight.

Sometimes it is desirable to show the tree in silhouette. This can be accomplished by lighting its background — wall, fence, or shrubbery — with just a little light on the tree itself to define it.

Fascinating effects can be achieved by mounting the light source high in a tree and aiming it downward so the light filters through the leaves and branches. The result — simulated moonlight.

YOU'LL FIND that the tree has a flat appearance if lighted from the direction from which you usually view it. Angle the light toward the tree.

But you'll get the most satisfaction out of your tree-lighting project by using your imagination, and experimenting until you get the results you want.

Course In Flower Drying Enlivens Home In Winter

Your flower garden can give you double beauty if you dry some of the blooms.

Dried flowers, arranged into a beautiful bouquet, can add color and charm to your home through the winter.

In colonial days the art of drying flowers was popular. Now, there has been a revival of this interest by many homemakers and garden club members.

STARTING TO select and dry materials early in the season is important if you want a variety of forms and colors to choose from when fall comes.

If you are interested in drying flowers, you'll be interested as well in a correspondence course offered by Pennsylvania State University.

You'll be instructed on which flowers to choose for drying, at what stage of maturity to pick each them and the best preserving materials to use.

As you select and preserve materials, remember that line, form, pattern, texture, and a pleasing color scheme are just as essential as for arrangements made with fresh plant material.

OTHER LESSONS in the course discuss design, containers, color and corsage- making. You'll learn which garden flowers to use, how to wire them and how to make bows for your corsages.

If you're interested, send $3 to Flower Arrangement, 202 Agricultural Education Building, University Park, Pa., 16802 Check or money order should be made payable to Pennsylvania State University.

When children discover a playmate wets the bed—the result can be merciless teasing. And serious psychological problems.

Even the entire family can be affected. The cost and work of taking care of a bed-wetting child can cause friction and irritability among parents. Walter C. Alvarez, M.D., Prof. Emeritus, Mayo Clinic, says: "Bedwetting . . . is hard on the unhappy child and on the mother . . . even if his parents do not scold him, he cannot help feeling that he is a terrible nuisance and a disgrace to the family."

But now bedwetting, when not caused by organic defect or disease, can be ended. Safely. Permanently.

Pacific International has ended bedwetting for tens of thousands of children and adults from ages 4 to 57 in the past two decades.

Doris Day Lives The Healthy Life

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) —Doris Day may be the healthiest star of a weekly television series, no small thanks to her dedication to health foods and a plentitude of exercise.

The freckled star of "The Doris Day Show" arises before 7 a.m. each day, exercises lightly in her bedroom and then swims vigorously in her extra-large swimming pool.

After a shower Doris has a hearty breakfast and is off to the studio for a day's work, which frequently doesn't end until after sundown.

It is not unusual for Doris to have a short nap in her dressing room after a lunch of fruit or salad.

A WIDOW — her husband, producer Martin Melcher, died more than two years ago — Doris' name does not appear in the gossip columns.

Shattered by the death of her husband, Doris retreated to her desert home in Palm Springs to reassemble her life. She is a devout Christian Scientist and drew strength from her religion.

She and Melcher once enjoyed the weekends at their Malibu Beach home, but Doris no longer spends much time there. On warm days she drives to the beach for long walks along the sand.

ON DAYS WHEN she's not working, or during vacations, Doris likes nothing better than riding her bicycle around the neighborhood.

With freckles abloom, a straw hat, slacks and blouse, Doris is rarely recognized by tourists or residents. She enjoys riding into the heart of the Beverly Hills shopping district to have a cup of tea and cookies at a favorite shop.

Her companions at home are six dogs. There is a collie named Daisy June, a mixed schnauzer and poodle who answers to Bubbles, and a frolicking foursome of poodles: Tiger, Muffy, Bobo and Charlie.

DORIS IS AN avid sports fan who can be found in the stands cheering for the basketball Lakers and baseball's Dodgers.

When the mood seized her — which is not infrequently — Doris redecorates her large, comfortable house. She is addicted to happy, bright colors, especially yellow and orange. Her furniture is comfortable and contemporary.

She likes to slip on a pair of gloves and putter about the yard, although she has a gardener. Additionally, she enjoys cooking, despite the fact she has full-time domestic help.

NEIGHBORS ARE sometimes surprised when Doris, now in her 40s, stops on her bicycle to admire their gardens.

The blonde star of the CBS series is the mother of a son, Terry, now in his 20s, who is an executive with a recording company.

The two are close and it was Terry to whom Doris turned for counsel when Melcher died.

THIS SEASON the format of her show will be changed somewhat to make Doris more metropolitan, a switch from the country setting of the series in its first year.

Doris is pleased with the change and the high ratings.

The house's occupant, Brian R. Balow, 20, was booked into Marin County Jail on suspicion of cultivation of marijuana and held on $1,000 bail, to appear in Marin Municipal Court Monday. Police made the raid after one of Balow's neighbors spotted the plants. (I-J photos)

Legislature Ends A Record Session

Welfare Package Defeated

SACRAMENTO (UPI)—The Legislature adjourned its longest session in history last night after killing a Reagan-backed welfare plan and voting more freeway construction money for Southern California.

The lawmackers left Sacramento without achieving what most had regarded as their No. 1 goal: Tax reform. Gov. Ronald Reagan's $1 billion tax revision program was killed by the Senate the night before adjournment.

The 1970 session ended with a flurry of confetti, firecrackers and good cheer at 10:30 p.m. after 229 days in continuous session—a record.

The Legislature will return briefly for five days on Sept. 21 to consider whether to override Reagan vetoes. Unless the governor calls them into special session—perhaps for tax or welfare reform—the lawmakers won't meet again until January.

IGNORE CONTENTIONS

The Senate ignored contentions that rejection of the welfare revision could cost the state $110 million and the counties $55 million in federal funds and killed it just before adjournment.

The measure needed 27 votes for passage and received only 17. Twelve voted against it. A few minutes earlier, it had passed the Assembly overwhelmingly, 73-2.

The program, negotiated in an interhouse conference committee, was designed to bring California welfare regulations into line with the Nixon Administration's. The Reagan Administration has been threatened with a cutoff of federal funds unless it falls into line with the federal government.

A COALITION

But a liberal-conservative coalition of opponents argued President Nixon would not "embarrass" Reagan during an election year by chopping off such a huge amount of federal money. They also said the issue could be reconsidered during the brief veto override session.

The bill, authored by Assemblyman Gordon Duffy, R-Hanford, would have increased Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) by 15 per cent starting next July, unless the federal government mandated the hike earlier. It also would have provided the aged, blind and disabled with a guaranteed $4 monthly increase.

"It helped poor people and it helped the taxpayers," Duffy said afterward, somewhat bitterly. "But perhaps the Senate has more important problems than to help the taxpayers and the poor."

SESSION OUT

Asked if he would request a special session on the issue, Duffy, chairman of the Assembly Health and Welfare Committee, replied:

"No sir. I did my thing."

Southern California legislators, meanwhile, won a fight they had been waging for decades when the Senate sent Reagan a bill increasing

OFFICIAL TALKS

Cancellation Of '71 Fair Looms

For the first time publicly, a Marin County official has said the County's Art and Garden Fair may have to be cancelled next year due to a lack of an adequate site.

Marin's fair had annually been held at the Art and Garden Center in Ross, but the county's contract with the center terminated this year and officials said it is highly unlikely the contract will be renewed. The Town of Ross has been unhappy with the large crowds which the fair lures into the small community.

Fair officials have been hopeful of moving the annual event to the county's new autitorium at the Civic Center, but a letter from Asst. County Administrator Thomas F. Campanella to the count board of supervisors says such a move next year would present problems.

Campanella's letter — to be heard by the supervisors Tuesday — suggests the fair may have to be cancelled because of the high cost of getting the grounds around the auditorium ready to accommodate large crowds.

Campanella said the fair could be held in the auditorium but indicated the fair would have to be held in September or October because the building won't be finished until at least that time. The Art and Garden Fair is usually held in early July.

He also said the size of the auditorium would severely limit the number of persons who could get in to see the fair.

As another option, Campanella said the fair could utilize both the auditorium and adjacent grounds and the lagoon, but indicated it would take about $160,000 to do the necessary landscaping.

He also said the county might ask the state's permission to move the fair to another location in the county.

U.S. Viet Foot War Slowest This Year

SAIGON (UPI)—Ground action involving U.S. forces in South Vietnam reached its lowest level this year with no major contact report for the past four days, military sources said today.

However, the sources warned the Communist forces could be assembling for attacks within 10 days to mark two major North Vietnamese holidays — independence day Sept. 2 and the first anniversary of Ho Chi Minh's death Sept. 3.

There also was no major fighting reported in Cambodia, with Cambodian forces carrying out operations seven miles north of Phnom Penh today to clear out the last of three defeated and disorganized Communist battalions that tried to crack the capital's defenses.

The U.S. Command in Saigon reported two Americans killed Friday—one a crewman aboard an Army helicopter when it was shot down east of Saigon and one in brief exchange of fire in northern Quang Tri province. Six Americans were wounded in the same area when their vehicle hit a mine.

Records showed that American casualties in Vietnam now are at about the same level as late 1965 when the massive U.S. buildup began.

South Vietnamese military spokesman announced the competition of a government operation near Highway 1 about nine miles inside Cambodia. Government Rangers reported killing 47 Communist troops in the 10-day drive near Kompong Trach and said 15 South Vietnamese soldiers were killed and 78 wounded.

A Cambodian military spokesman said three Cambodian battalions were combing marshes in the area of Prek Tameak, a village nine miles north of the capital. The village fell to the Communists during fighting that began Wednesday and the announcement was not clear whether it had been retaken by the Cambodians.

Flares lit the sky north of Phnom Penh Friday night but the spokesman said they were set off "only to warn the civilian population." He did not elaborate.

Today's cleaning up operations were the closing chapters of a Communist assault directed against Cambodian defenders guarding the northern approaches to Phnom Penh. The probes apparently were aimed at testing the capital's defenses, although the broad Mekong River lies between the Communists and Phnom Penh and would make a direct attack on the city itself nearly impossible.

A Cambodian battalion, backed up against the river, held off at least six assaults and killed 500 Communist soldiers, field commanders reported. Two battalions of reinforcements moved in to help the battle-weary soldiers Friday.

The Cambodians said they suffered 19 dead and 124 wounded.

In other action in Cambodia a Communist force of unknown size harassed Cambodian defense positions in the provincial

Sihanouk Will Free Journalists

BELGRADE (UPI) — The Cambodian government in exile of Prince Norodom Sihanouk has announced it will release four journalists captured by Communist forces fighting there, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug said today in a dispatch from Peking.

The dispatch did not identify those to be released by name but said two were French, another Dutch and a fourth American.

Tanjug said Sihanouk's coordination minister, Thioun Prasith, told a news conference the four journalists will be released "in the course of the coming week." Sihanouk set up his government in exile in the capital of Communist China after he was ousted as Cambodian chief of state last March.

Prasith said the government in exile was attempting to

Blaze Hits Filipino Vessel; 42 Aboard

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) -An air and sea rescue flotilla Saturday reached the Philippine cargo ship Don Jose Figueras, on fire and in "critical" danger of sinking in the Pacific with 42 persons aboard.

"The situation is getting worse" since the Figueras radioed its first S.O.S. Friday night, the Coast Guard said.

"The captain has reported the firefighting situation has grown worse and he has fires in three holds. The pumps are no longer working," the Coast Guard reported.

"He has evaluated the situation as critical."

The vessel was reported cracking along the portside and listing 23 degrees to starboard.

Two Japanese ships, the Ogishima Maru and the Cuba Maru, responded to the 466-foot Figueras' S.O.S. and stood by ready to launch lifeboats.

Two U. S. Air Force planes hovered over the Figueras, located 985 miles northwest of San Francisco. They dropped inflatable life rafts and a radio.

An Air Force C130 from Hamilton Air Force Base, radied that the Figueras appeared to be "sinking fast," but Coast Guard officials said it might be hours before the ship's fate would be decided. The weather was good with seas running moderate and south winds of 17 knots.

The Figueras was carrying a cargo of toys and other items for Sears Roebuck over the Great Circle route. It also had two passengers.

It's agent, Transmarine Navigation Corp., said it has received a message from the ship saying it was "in very critical situation."

When the Figueras sent its S.O.S. Friday saying its 42-man crew was unable to control the flames, the U. S. Coast Guard cutter Yacona was dispatched from the nearest port, Astoria, Ore. The Yacona was about 500 miles away and was not due on the scene until Monday morning.

U.S. Plans To Keep Suez Canal Flights

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The United States plans to continue high altitude reconnaissance flights over the Suez Canal cease-fire zone despite Egyptian objections.

State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said in Washington Friday the flights would continue. The semioffici-al Cairo newspaper Al Ahram said Egypt had notified the United States it objected to the use of U2 reconnaissance planes and orbiting satellites to monitor the Suez cease-fire line.

McCloskey also expressed optimism U.N. negotiator Gunnar V. Jarring soon would obtain agreement by Israel, Egypt and Jordan on a time and place for the Middle East peace talks to begin. The cease-fire that hopefully will lead to such talks now is in its 15th day.

United Nations diplomats said the talks are expected to begin in New York next week under the auspices of Jarring, possibly with ambassador to the United Nations Joseph Tekoah representing Israel.

In Alexandria, Egyptian president Gamal Abdel Nasser and Jordan's King Hussein continued their talks today to work out a united front when the discussions get under way.

An official communique on the meetings, which began Thursday, said at their Friday meeting Hussein and Nasser discussed "the Arab situation in all its international, military and political aspects, as well as everything that is connected with the confrontation with the enemy."

The presence in Hussein's delegation of Suleiman El-Nabulsi, a Jordanian ex-premier of Palestinian origin, indicated the talks also might cover the long-range future of the Palestinians.

In Beirut, Palestinian sources said three vehicle-loads of Israeli troops crossed the border into Lebanon early Friday and blew up three vacant houses in the village of Al-Zahira. The action apparently was in reprisal for raids by guerrillas based in Lebanon. The guerrillas have not accepted the cease-fire.

Israel Friday night lodged their fourth complaint with the United Nations claiming "grave" violations of the cease-fire by the Egyptians.

A spokesman said the complaint referred to information in the hands of the Israeli defense forces which showed construction work on missile

WESTERN WHITE HOUSE

Nixon Gives Agnew Asian Sendoff

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — President Nixon gave Vice President Agnew a personal sendoff today on his far east swing to reassure Asian allies of America's continuing commitment in that area.

The vice president took off before noon after conferring with Secretary of State William P. Rogers and National Security Affairs Adviser Henry A. Kissinger.

The vice president will be gone 12 days on his second Asian tour, with stops in South Korea, Taiwan, Thailand and South Vietnam to meet with government leaders. It also was hinted the vice president might visit Cambodia.

Agnew leaves at a time when some of the leaders of Southeast Asia are concerned with the Nixon policy of lowering the U.S. profile and presence in their part of the world.

Nixon was in an exuberant mood on his arrival at his blufftop villa here Friday following a brief but colorful state visit to Puerto Vallarto, Mexico, to meet with Mexian President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz.

Their talks ended with an historic agreement solving the long standing border disputes between the two nations and setting guidelines for settling future problems caused by the shifting Rio Grande, which separates Texas from Mexico.

Winding up his 28-hour stay in Puerto Vallarta, Nixon, in a flowery toast, announced he would hold a state dinner in honor of Diaz at the elegant Hotel Del Coronado near San Diego, Calif., on Sept. 3.

He also described the dinner, with 800 guests invited, as the windup event in California's 200th anniversary celebration.

The president has a heavy official schedule for his two week stay at the Western White House. Rogers and Attorney General John N. Mitchell will be on hand for the duration for high-level meetings.

The president also planned to summon other cabinet members and military advisers to meetings of the domestic council and the National Security Council later in the week.

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon is far along in formulating next year's federal budget.

Ziegler did not comment on a report that the 1972 budget may show a $10 billion to $15 billion deficit. He noted Congress has not acted on a number of current appropriations bills.

The President was greeted by a crowd of several hundred well-wishers when he came home from his trip to Mexico. Smiling and pleased with the turnout, he spent about 15 minutes walking along the fence and shaking hands.

His daughter and son-in-law, Julie and David Eisenhower, were waiting at the villa to greet the Nixons when they arrived. The Nixon's eldest daughter, Tricia, is expected to join the family next week.

Linda Kasabian To Write 'Family' Book

MILFORD, N. H. (UPI)—Linda Kasabian, the star prosecution witness in the Tate-LaBianca murder trial in Los Angeles, plans to write a book about her experiences with the Manson family, the Boston Globe said today in a copyrighted story.

The tiny mother of two said she has agreed to collaborate with an unidentified West Coast author in the venture, it was reported.

'Hall Of Fame' Likes The Bard

The Hallmark Hall of Fame has brought more complete Shakespearean productions to television than any other dramatic series.

It has offered television versions of "Hamlet," "King Richard II," two productions of "Macbeth," "The Taming of the Shrew" and its musical adaptation "Kiss Me Kate," "Twelfth Night" and "The Tempest."

The Bard will visit The Hall of Fame again this fall when it celebrates its 20th consecutive year on television with a new production of "Hamlet" starring Richard Chamberlain on NBC-TV.

WIRE NEWS BRIEFS From Everywhere

Tax Extensions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate voted 69 to 0 Friday to require the military to extend tours of duty outside combat zones "for longer periods of time." The move was opposed by the Pentagon.

25 Bus Deaths

SEOUL (UPI) — The death toll in a Friday night bus crash on the new Pusan-Seoul highway has risen to 25 and may increase, police said today. Ten passengers were killed outright when the bus rolled off the highway into a valley and 15 have died since. Another 22 passengers are hospitalized in critical condition.

Sellers To Wed

LONDON (UPI) — British actor Peter Sellers Monday will marry Miranda Quarry, 23, the stepdaughter of Lord Mancroft.

Friday Sellers, according to his agent, said that "after spending two years of getting to know each other pretty well, we decided not to wait any longer. We are both very happy."

Reagan Vacation

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Gov. Ronald Reagan begins a week's vacation Monday at his Pacific Palisades home, press aides announced Friday.

Reagan was confined to his office the past week because it was the wrapup of the 1970 legislative session.

To Brief Press

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — Some 50 newspaper and broadcast editors from 13 Western states will get a briefing on foreign affairs at the Western White House Monday.

An administration spokesman said Friday the briefing will be conducted by Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, Nixon's national security affairs adviser, and Joseph Sisco, undersecretary of state for the Middle East, following opening remarks by the President.

Black Day

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — The legislature passed and forwarded to Gov. Ronald Reagan Friday a bill by assemblyman Willie Brown Jr., D-San Francisco, designating March 5 as Black American Day in California.

Final approval occurred when the Assembly agreed, at Brown's "reluctant" urging, to accept Senate amendments which rewrote the bill.

The bill originally set Jan. 15, the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr., for the observance. But the Senate Finance Committee struck that provision and substitute March 5, the date of the death of Crispus Attucks, the first black man to die in the American Revolutionary War.

Some of the legislators said they felt King was too "controversial" a figure.

CAP Executive

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Gen. John Paul McConnel, former Air Force chief of staff, was named executive consultant to the Civil Air Patrol today, an official auxiliary of the air force.

Suspected Slayer's Sketch Is Released

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI)— An artist's composite sketch of the suspected slayer of Patrolman Ronald Tsukamoto has been released by police. The 28-year-old rookie was the third Bay Area officer slain in the past two months.

Sgt. Richard Burger said Friday a witness to the shooting, which authorities termed "a political assassination," told police the sketch was "somewhat similar" to the killer.

The suspect was described as Negro, 5 feet 11, 170 pounds. He has a two-inch Afro hairdo and is about 22 years old.

Tsukamoto was killed Thursday as he stood on a Berkeley street corner talking to a motorcyclist he stopped for making an illegal U-turn. Police have declined to identify the motorcyclist as a safety precaution.

According to the witness, the suspect walked up to them, joined briefly in conversation, pulled out a pistol and shot Tsukamoto in the head.

Others who saw the shooting said the gunman escaped in a nearby car in which one and possibly two persons were waiting. The car was believed to be a light-colored 1959 Studebaker.

Berkeley Police Chief Bruce Baker's charge that the killing was political draw a retort Friday from the National Committee to Combat Fascism, a group of white sympathizers of black militants.

The Berkeley Police Department and other police departments in the nation, the committee said, are "reaping the harvest of years of oppressive brutality and murder in ghetto communities."

University of California Police, meanwhile, reported that two Molotov cocktails were thrown at their patrol cars Trursday night. Neither caused damage to the vehicles but one started a shrubbery fire.

San Francisco Police chief Al Nelder discontinued one-man cars the day after the fatal shooting of Patrolman Richard Radetich in July. San Jose Chief Ray Blackmore announced after Tsukamoto's death that two-man cars will be on the streets during the critical hours of the night.

Earlier this month, San Jose patrolman Richard Huerta was shot to death as he wrote out a traffic ticket.

Apperson Ridge Basalt Mining Plan Is Halted

LIVERMORE (UPI) — Utah Construction and Mining Co. has abandoned its controversial plan to quarry basalt from scenic Apperson Ridge near Sunol Valley Regional Park.

The company and the ridge's owner, William W. Apperson announced Friday that Utah's lease had been terminated. However, Apperson's attorney said the owner was studying several other proposals concerning the basalt deposit.

Utah's plan to remove 10 million cubic yards from the ridge over a 30-year period was rejected by the Alameda County Board of Supervisors last October after protests from conservationists.

The fatality rate on the nation's interstate highway system is 2.9 per 100 million miles of travel, against 5.7 for conventional roads.

Kesey Clears His Last Legal Hurdle

REDWOOD CITY (UPI)— Novelist Ken Kesey, 34, now is off marijuana and out of trouble with the law.

The author of "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest" and "Sometimes A Great Notion" cleared his last legal hurdle Friday.

Judge Allison Rouse held that "because of the publicity given this case in the past, I want to show that this action is not discretionary, but mandatory procedure when the term of probation has been satisfied."

Kesey, former college wrestler and hero of the nation's hippie set, served six months in the San Mateo County jail and was on probation for three years. One of the terms of his probation was to abstain from use of marijuana.

County probation officer Ray Faber told the judge Kesey had complied with all terms of his probation. Kesey, who lives in Oregon, was not in court.

There are $222 in paper currency and $29 in coins in circulation for each person in the United States, says the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago.

State Ready To Place Manson At Tate Mansion Prior To Killings

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The prosecution at the Tate murder trial has two witnesses ready to testify that Charles Manson was at Sharon Tate's home and possibly met Miss Tate shortly before the mass murders a year ago this August.

The disclosure that the hippie cult leader was seen at the estate was made by a court source Friday and contradicts the defense line that Manson never had an opportunity to see, let alone meet, the blonde actress.

The trial, in recess over the weekend, was featured Friday by the testimony of Los Angeles County Coroner Thomas T. Noguchi who said that Miss Tate was stabbed 16 times and had throat burns "consistent with being hanged."

Before Noguchi took the stand, a court source confirmed during the morning session that Rudy Altabelli, owner of the $225,000 estate which Miss Tate and her husband, Roman Polanski, leased, and Miss Tate's personal photographer, S. Hatami, will testify they saw Manson in the home and on the grounds a few weeks before the killings.

It was not known whether the witnesses will testify that they actually saw Miss Tate and Manson together, but the opportunity existed.

The defense has consistently denied that the 35-year-old cult leader was ever at the home in the summer of 1969 and said he had never met the beautiful blonde actress.

"The cause of death was multiple stab wounds of the chest and back, penetrating the hearts, the lungs and the liver, causing a massive hemorrhage," Noguchi said.

At Least 39 Dead From Tropical Storm Dorothy

SAN JUAN, P. R. (UPI)— The death toll from tropical storm Dorothy on the islands of Martinique and Dominica climbed to at least 39 today while the storm continued its march across the Caribbean, threatening Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

At least four other persons were reported missing on Martinique and sketchy reports filtering from the storm-battered island indicated at least 200 others were injured.

All but one of the deaths occurred on Martinique when the storm hit Thursday. The one man who died on Dominica lost his life when a bridge he was crossing was washed out by a flash flood.

Army engineers on French Martinique were busy today trying to restore roads, power and telephone lines knocked out by the torrential rains and high winds.

Drinking water was rationed and the island was left without air service. Officials said flights probably would not be resumed before Sunday night.

Guadeloupe, another French island north of Martinique, reported no casualties from the storm, but officials said much of the island's vital banana crop had been destroyed.

At 6 a.m. EDT the storm was centered near latitude 15.7 north, longitude 69.0 west, or about 270 miles southwest of San Juan.

BUT U.S. VIOLENT

Visiting Italian Students Find Marin One Of The Best Places

By C.P. McCARTHY

Whether America is an inherently violent nation may be a debatable point, but to a group of Italian students now spending a couple of weeks in Marin, there is no doubt about it.

The 10 students have been in the U.S. since July 13, and in Marin since Aug. 1, on a visit arranged by an organization called Experiment in International Living, with headquarters in Putney, Vt.

After arriving in the U.S. and undergoing two days of orientation at Putney, the group headed west with overnight stops in Chicago and Salt Lake City.

Two weeks were spent at the University of Nevada in Reno before the group came to Marin. Each is housed with a Marin family.

The impression of violence is understandable. During the students' one-night stay in Chicago, an 18-year-old Stockton girl, attending a convention, was found dead — her throat slashed — in a hotel room two floors above those of the Italian students.

While in Reno, the body of a 7-year-old girl was found murdered in a cellar.

And less than a week after their arrival in Marin, Judge Harold J. Haley of Marin Superior Court and three others died in a bloody shoot-out at the Civic Center.

"Everywhere we go, someone's dead," was Fausto Pelizzari's impression.

Pelizzari, 22, was among the students who talked with the Independent-Journal this week.

The strangest thing seen in their American travels, they agreed, was an Indian dressed in western clothes in Salt Lake City.

"It's sad," his companion, Massimiliano Sironi, 22, commented. "The cowboy killed so many Indians and now the Indian wears the clothes of the killer."

The students agreed the major misconception they had of America before coming was its affluence.

"People in Europe imagine the United States as a place where everything is permitted everyone, where everyone can afford to buy anything," Sironi said, "but when you come, it's not so.

"You can see two sides: where the rich live and where the poor live. It's the same as in Europe," he said, adding, however, that "people in Europe would never imagine anything so sad as Harlem."

The students reflected favorably to other conditions, however. For instance, Pelizzari said, "I didn't expect to find such great kindness in American people."

He said he had wrongly envisioned Americans only as dedicated workers and with somewhat mechanical personalities.

"I didn't expect Americans would be so human," he said.

And through a system of logic, they observed that Marin County is one of the best places in the world.

Pelizzari explained it like this: "Marin County is one of the best places around San Francisco; San Francisco is one of the best places in California; California is one of the best places in the United States, and the United States is one of the best places in the world."

"But I don't believe all America is like Marin," he added, quickly.

During their Marin stay, which will end Tuesday, Pelizzari is staying with Mr. and Mrs. Bruno Michetti of 27 Briarwood Drive, San Rafael, and Sironi is staying with Dr. and Mrs. Philip Hicks of Woodhaven Road, Ross.

State Legislators Will Convene In Salt Lake City

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI)— State Legislators from all the states will open their 23rd Annual National Legislative Conference in Salt Lake City Monday.

Sen. W. Hughes Brockbank, R-Salt Lake City, president of the conference, said Friday, "This is the first time this meeting of the leaders from the various states have met in Utah."

"This conference will address itself to problems that face the states," the Utah state senator added. "When the delegates return home they will impliment programs to help in solving their local problems."

The major issue in this years conference will be the balance of power between the state and federal governments, according to Brockbank.

"In the past the federal government has set the guidelines for the state governments," he noted. "We need to get the state legislatures to start a frontend input to stimulate federal legislation."

He said the states have lost considerable power to the "bureaucratic beast" in Washington, and the state governments need to regain this power.

Brockbank added that the states were attempting to regain some of this lost ground through "income tax sharing and promoting federal legislation on welfare."

Conference officials expect about 1,750 guests during the weeklong meeting. About 1,000 of these will be delegates, and the others will be wives and children.

Brockbank said the conference is made up of elected representatives and their staffs. The conference will have two concurrent sessions—one for the estimated 600 elected legislators and one for the approximately 400 staff members.

Five Men From Marin Inducted Into Service

Five men were inducted into the armed forces in August by the Marin Selective Service Board, executive secretary Joy M. Kinzer reported yesterday.

Twenty-four men had been ordered to report for induction.

Mrs. Kinzer said eight failed to report; two refused induction; one had his induction transferred to another board; four failed to meet physical standards; one enlisted prior to induction and three are pending induction.

Tha names of those who failed to report and refused induction were withheld pending possible court action.

The five inducted were Richard R. Dougan of Nicasio, Glenn S. Hunter of Kentfield, Steven L. Waite of Novato, Jeffrey G. Ferris of Tiburon and Ray J. Young of Ventura.

Young was inducted through the Marin board because he registered in Marin County on his 18th birthday.

The September draft will be held to men with lottery numbers through 195 — the second month in a row the draft has been held at that number. Mrs. Kinzer reported there are 20 eligible registrants in Marin for the September draft.

Tiburon Sets Budget Adoption

The Tiburon City Council will adopt a $685,000 budget and set the city property tax rate when it meets Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall. The council is required to set the property tax rate by Aug. 31.

If no further changes in the spending program are made, the tax rate is expected to be set at 80 cents per $100 assessed valuation, up from last year's 65-cent rate.

The council also will consider on second reading approval of a master plan for additions to Tiburon Lodge and of construction of a Bank of America branch nearby.

Three Persons Hurt In Three Accidents

Three persons were treated at Marin General Hospital yesterday and early today for injuries received in three Marin auto accidents, the California Highway Patrol reported.

Helen Marie Green, 28, of 947 Drake Avenue, Marin City, suffered a mild whiplash when she swerved on Highway 101 near the Corte Madera interchange to avoid another car and hit a divider fence. The accident happened about 12:15 p.m. yesterday.

A Sainta Venetia youth suffered minor injuries when his vehicle left North San Pedro Road near La Brea Way about 11:15 p.m. yesterday and rolled onto its side, the highway patrol said.

James D. Lazzarini, 17, of 140 Holmes Avenue, was treated for scrapes and bruised, the hospital reported.

A 37-year-old Sausaltio man suffered bruised ribs and facial cuts when a car in which he was a passenger collided with another vehicle on Drake Avenue in Marin City at 5:30 a.m. today.

The highway patrol said Willie Lewis of 561 Bridgeway was riding in a car driven by Pauline Moore, 32, of 1 Cole Drive, Marin City, which collided with a vehicle driven by Eugene Johnson, 25, of 720 Drae Avenue.

12,000 On Strike In Auto Plants

LONDON (UPI) — Strikes idled 12,000 workers in Britain's automotive industry today. The government said the nation's economy is bordering on a slump, partly because of a recession in the United States.

About 5,000 workers at the GKN-Sankey automotive components factory at Wellington, England, voted Friday to continue a two-week-old strike to press demands for a pay parity with the rest of the industry.

The strike has forced the layoff of thousands of workers at Chrysler, British Leyland, M.G. and Triumph truck and automobile plants in England and Scotland and a Massey-Ferguson tractor factory at Coventry, England.

At a Chrysler plant in Linwood, 600 men went on strike when the management increased the speed of assembly lines for IMP and Arrow cars. The company said the move had been approved by the men who walked out.

Automotive industry officials said unless the components factory and other strikes end soon about 20,000 men will be laid off by the end of next week. The components men are demanding a weekly wage increase of $15.60. Management has offered $9.60.

Michael Noble, president of the Board of Trade, said Friday the economy was "very much on the borderline of a slump and one hopes we will get it going up again."

"The American recession has something to do with the situation," he told a news conference during a tour of industrial areas in Scotland. "The Americans, however, appear to be beginning to get things right again."

He said much would depend on the extent to which the Nixon administration permits American investment abroad.

Earlier today, the French Television Network announced in Paris that Alain Clement, a member of a camera crew missing in Cambodia since July 7, has been released from captivity by the Viet Cong.

(In Phnom Penh, the Committee for the Safety of Foreign Correspondents in Cambodia also announced Clement's release as well ask that of Lydie Nicaise, a freelance journalist. The committee also said that Xavier Baron of the French news agency (AFP) and Johannes Duynisveld, a Dutchman in charge of a student newspaper, would be released shortly. There was no report of an American to be released.)

highway construction funds in their populous counties.

The bill, by Sen. James R. Mills, D-San Diego, raises Southern California's share of the state gasoline revenue from 55 to 60 per cent.

Passage of the landmark measure resulted indirectly from the U.S. Supreme Court's 1964 one-man, one-vote decision, which culminated in reapportionment of the Senate in 1966. This increased Southern California's representation in the Senate and ended Northern domination.

Two of the most powerful men ever to serve in the legislature wound up their legislative careers Friday night. Former Speaker Jess Unruh is surrendering his assembly seat to run against Gov. Ronald Reagan in November. Sen. Hugh M. Burns, D-Fresno, 68-year-old former Senate president pro tem, is retiring after a 34-year career.

The two houses acted on approximately 500 pieces of legislation during their final day in regular session.

Among the major issues they acted on were these:

Oil—The Assembly killed legislation sponsored by Unruh and Sen. Robert J. Lagomarsino, R-Ojai, banning all future oil drilling in the Santa Barbara Channel. Unruh later charged "the oil industry now has proved it owns state government."

Murder—The Assembly sent Reagan a bill by Assemblyman W. Craig Biddle, R-Riverside, making it murder to intentionally kill a human fetus.

Methadone—The Senate voted final passage to a bill by Assemblyman John Vasconcellos, D-San Jose, authorizing establishment of local methadone treatment clinics for heroin addicts.

School—the Assembly and Senate both voted final passage to legislation appropriating $150,000 to study dividing the sprawling Los Angeles School District into a dozen or more subdistricts. The author was Sen. John Harmer, R-Glendale.

Women—The Assembly sent the governor a bill by Assemblyman Charles Warren, D-Los Angeles, making it illegal for an employer to discriminate on the basis of sex.

Mansion—Both houses passed a bill changing the future site of the governor's mansion from downtown Sacramento to a wooded bluff overlooking the American River. The author was Sacramento Assemblyman Leroy F. Greene.

Flag—both houses passed a bill by Assemblyman E. Richard Barnes, R-San Diego, making it a crime to defile the American flag.

Animal Protein Increase In Diets

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Although 50 per cent of the world's annual protein supply per person is supplied by cereal and starch roots, a corporate researcher foresees an increase in animal protein in human diets.

Dr. H. L. Wilcke, vice-president and director of corporate research for Ralston Purina Co., said while the world searches for new sources of protein on land and in the seas.

capital of Kompong Thom, 80 miles north of Phnom Penh. Kompong Thom has been subject to such action by the Communists for almost a month.

In a delayed report, the Cambodian high command said 70 Communist soldiers had been killed and 70 wounded by air strikes Thursday about 18 miles southeast of Phnom Penh. The air strikes were carried out by Cambodian planes, the command said.

South Vietnamese action was light, with Communist gunners firing some 60 rounds of mortar on South Vietnamese defenders at Fire Base O'Reilly, 390 miles north of Saigon and 10 miles east of the Laotian border.

American B52 bombers hit Communist targets five to six miles southwest of O'Reilly for the third straight day, as well as at other points along infiltration routes leading from Laos to the lowlands along the northern coast.

The U.S. Army reported "no direct contact" with Communist units, but one American was killed anw two wounded when an OH58 helicopter was shot down by Communist ground fire 12 miles northeast of Saigon Friday.

Lemon Rehired By Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — The Kansas City Royals today extended Bob Lemon's contract as manager through the 1971 season.

Lemon, 49, replaced Charlie Metro as Royals' manager on June 9.

"Under the circumstances, Lemon has done a fine job of placing the ball club in a competitive frame of mind," said Cedric Tallis, Royals' vice president, in making the announcement. "We believe much progress has been made which will be beneficial in the future.

Mission Setting For Nuptial Vows

Mission San Rafael Arcangel in San Rafael was the setting for the wedding of Vicki Ann Rademacher to Christopher Dennis Cowman of Fairfax on Sunday afternoon.

Matron of honor for Vicki was Mrs. Donald May Jr. of Fairfax, and the bridesmaids were Candis Cowman of San Anselmo, the bridegroom's sister; and Denise Damele of San Francisco.

Timothy Cowman of San Anselmo was his brother's best man. The guests were seated by John Kalogiannis of Santa Venetia and Craig Cunningham of San Rafael.

A reception was given afterward at the Deer Park Villa restaurant in Fairfax.

After they return from a wedding trip to Portland, Ore., the Cowmans will live in Fairfax.

Vicki is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rademacher of San Rafael. Now employed with the Carousel beauty salon in San Anselmo, she is a graduate of San Rafael High School and Marinello Beauty College. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bini of San Rafael are the bride's grandparents.

Christopher's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cowman of San Anselmo. He was graduated from Sir Francis Drake High School and is employed with S and T Motors in San Francisco.

SEW SIMPLE

Woven Trims Work Best For Banding The Polyester Knits

DEAR EUNICE,

When sewing with the polyester knits and you can't find the type of banding to match your fabric, is it all right to use the same knit material in double thickness for the neck and sleeve bands?

Also, I just recently became aware of your column while taking a trip through the Midwest. How does one go about getting their questions answered if our paper doesn't carry your column?

MRS. K.W.E.

DEAR MRS. K.W.E.:

The exact type of trim or banding that is used by the manufacturers for trim is seldom available to fabric shops. However, recently there have been some very good looking woven trims that come in a variety of colors and these should become available in all areas soon. As to the double layer of knitted fabric for the banding, yes, it could be used. However, it will probably be more attractive if you use some type of contrast in color.

In answer to your last question, I only wish my column were available everywhere. In the meantime, perhaps your friends will send you a copy each week. I do not answer personal letters, but I choose questions that have the most general interest and try to share these with our readers.

MRS. BEN JOHN IS this week's Tailor Trix pressing board winner for her following sewing suggestion.

"Although I am now living in Japan, I still love to read Sew Simple which relatives send to me. I'd like to submit the following sewing tip for your Tailor Trix award.

"After your facing has been stitched to any inner curve, such as a neckline or armhole, grade your seams as usual, then carefully clip the seam allowance to release your fabric and allow a nice cured area. Since these seams must be clipped clear to the stitching line, instead of clipping them together, clip the seam allowance on the layer of fabric as usual. Next, clip the second seam allowance between the first ones. This gives the same effect of very close clipping without shredding the seam allowance."

DEAR EUNICE:

I have used some of the new bonding agent that fuses two layers of fabric together but am not happy with the results. I used it at the neckline of a dress and it shows through. Now I am wondering how in the world this can be removed?

MRS. S.L.B.

DEAR MRS. S.L.B.:

Sorry you didn't read the long

column I wrote concerning these fusible bonding agents. I have never seen any product that works perfectly for each and every type of fabric. For this reason, I warned our readers to experiment first on some scraps of fabric. If you can see the bonding line, it was not the type of interfacing to use for your dress.

The type I have used can be removed by warming the area with a warm, not hot iron, and carefully pulling it apart. Once again, this is not always successful. A word of advice — test before, not after, to avoid a mishap.

Eunice Farmer gives illustrated instructions on how to make professional looking sleeves in her booklet "All About Sleeves." To obtain your booklet send 10 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request for it to Sew Simple in care of the Independent-Journal.

MARRIED AT Blessed Sacrament Church in Santa Venetia were Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Hills of San Rafael. The former Patti Dildine, she is the daughter of Mrs. Patricia Dildine of Los Angeles. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. Warren Hills of San Rafael.

Kathleen Gail Flaherty Recites Vows With Richard C. Newton II

Exchanging marriage vows at Bidwell Memorial Presbyterian Church in Chico were Kathleen Gail Flaherty of Terra Linda and Richard Carl Newton II of Yuba City.

Robin Horvath of San Rafael was Kathleen's maid of honor and Donna Jarvis of Hollister was the bridesmaid for the Aug. 15 rite.

Randall Newton of Yuba City was his brother's best man. The bride's brother, Kevin Craig Flaherty of Terra Linda, seated the guests.

A reception was held in Chico after the ceremony and another reception will be given Aug. 30 around the pool at the home of the bride's parents in Terra Linda, Mr. and Mrs. Richard R. Flaherty.

The couple went to Southern California for a wedding trip and returned to Marysville for water skiing. They will live in Atwater.

Kathleen is a graduate of Terra Linda High School. She attended Chico State College and plans to enter Stanislaus State College. She has been employed with the Terra Linda Recreation Center.

The bride is the sister of Richard and Laurel Flaherty of Terra Linda. Her local grandparents are Mrs. Betty Foley of Novato and Mr. and Mrs. William Luther of San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Carl Newton of Yuba City are the bridegroom's parents. Richard, who is a teacher at Atwater High School, was graduated from Yuba City High School, Yuba Junior College and Chico State College.

THE SUBURBAN SCENE

Garden Gathering Honors Debutantes

By MOLLY MARIN

Marin debutantes Jennifer Relfe and Mara Hunter were honored at a party given last night by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Relfe and Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter, all of Kentfield, at the Hunter home.

Guests were the other Marin debs, their escorts and their fathers, who gathered for a barbecue supper at yellow and white umbrella tables placed throughout the garden area. They also enjoyed swimming and dancing under a canopied pavilion.

Jennifer was graduated from Santa Catalina School for Girls and plans to enter the University of Pacific next month. Mara will go to Los Angeles to become a freshman at the University of Southern California. She was graduated in May from San Dominico.

PARTICIPATING in the testimonial dinner tonight for the retiring Consul General of Mexico, Adolfo G. Dominguez, and his wife, Milla, will be Dr. and Mrs. Mario Ramos of San Rafael. The dinner will be held at the Grand Ballroom of the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco for the Mexican couple, who will return to Mexico City to live and where their family resides.

Mr. Ramos, who is the president of the Instituto Cultural Mexicano, will introduce Fulton Freeman, former American ambassador to Mexico, during the dinner. Mrs. Ramos, a former opera singer, will sing the traditional farewell sang "La Golondrina," to conclude the banquet.

Guests of the Ramoses for the evening will be Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Kilgore of Tiburon, Col. and Mrs. Donald Roberts of San Francisco, Mrs. James T. Ashton of San Rafael, mother of Mrs. Ramos, and her son Rolf Brunkhorst Jr.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

A Heartbreak Is Daydreaming About The Big Reconciliation

DEAR HELEN:

Could you please print again your column on "What Is Being Hurt"? It was written by a girl who, like me, is trying to recover from a broken heart. Thanks. — ANGELA

DEAR ANGELA:

How about this as a substitute? — What Is Heartbreak?

Heartbreak is smiling to cover up a heartbreak.

It's telling everyone "We weren't right for each other," but knowing you were perfect for one another — so why doesn't he know?

It's wanting to be alone so you can daydream about the big reconciliation.

Heartbreak is trying to look happy when he sees you. If you don't he'll feel bad, because he's hurt you (he's that kind of guy.)

It's defending him when someone puts him down — even if it isn't your business any more.

It's wishing he'd go away so you could forget him — but stretching your neck at any social event to look for him. (And then he's with her.)

It's remembering the things you said that you shouldn't have said, and saying "I'm sorry" to his picture that's still on the back of your dresser. It's hoping every telephone call will be him, but it never is because that last fight blew everything. So he treats you like a sister, and how can you get around that?

Heartbreak is a pillow full of tears, a soul full of emptiness, a heart full of unanswered love, and a head full of beautiful memories. It's hoping that maybe . . . someday . . . somehow . . . but knowing deep down you aren't even fooling yourself.

Heartbreak is realizing too late that you're stupid and you goofed. — HEARTBROKEN

DEAR HELEN:

Could you once more give us the name and address of the organization that sends our letters to our servicemen in Vietnam? — THE GIRLS

DEAR GIRLS:

Send your letters to servicemen inside another envelope addressed to:

VIETNAM MAIL CALL,
Box 3104-A,
Columbus, Georgia, 31903

Enclose five cents for each letter, to help cover overseas postage. Include your name and address on your stationery; write as interestingly as possible about upbeat things. Even if you don't get an answer to every letter, you'll know that you cheered someone who badly needed a note from home. — H.

P.S.: Here's another way you can write. The USO has just begun "Operation Pen Pal." Put your letter inside a stamped (six cents) envelope and address it to:

Operation Pen Pal
USO Executive Office—Saigon
APO San Francisco 96243

This column is dedicated to family living, so if you're having kid trouble or just plain trouble, let Helen help you. Address Helen Bottel in care of the Independent-Journal.

"armed" cutter "Rafella" in full dress as a ship of the line circa 1789 out to greet the new ferryboat last Saturday and "properly cannonaded" her Aboard the black and yellow cutter, which is gaffheaded and rigged in the old style, was poet Jon Sharp from the University of Ipswich. The Rafella carried British ensigns aloft in honor of the Englishman.

Spiro, who has said that he "gives formal salutes to boats of character and dignity provided their masters are reputable," no doubt looks forward to firing off another cannonade salute when the "Golden Gate" returns to bay waters.

PRESS GUIDE IS AVAILABLE

A guide for press chairmen of organizations interested in getting news to the Marin Women's Section of the Independent Journal is available at the San Rafael main office and the Novato, Mill Valley and Southern Sonoma I-J offices.

The booklet, "Getting News Into Your Newspaper," is issued as a service of the Independent-Journal Women's Section to assist press chairmen for women's organizations.

The guide explains policies of coverage, how to prepare news stories and meeting notices, and the special stories and features emphasized by the section.

The booklets at the San Rafael office may be obtained from the switchboard on the main floor.

Vows Said In Larkspur Garden Rite

A ceremony in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. Philip S. Wright's Larkspur home united in marriage Mr. Wright's sister, Charla Moana Wright of San Francisco, and Robert Ellson Ness, also of San Francisco. A reception at the home followed.

Maid of honor was Lani Fitzsimmons, and bridesmaids were Rowena Ness, Robert's sister, and Carla Fitzsimmons. All are residents of San Francisco.

Thomas Laman of San Jose was best man, and Leslie Fitzsimmons of San Francisco ushered.

Charla attended City College of San Francisco and Heald's Business College. She is employed by American Airlines in Burlingame. The bride is the daughter of Charles Wright and Mrs. Karrie Wright, both of San Francisco.

Robert is the son of Frederick Ness of San Mateo and Mrs. Kathleen Ness of San Francisco. He is a graduate of George Washington High School and San Francisco State College and is employed by the San Francisco Fire Dept. Patricia Krusinsky of San Rafael is also his sister.

Following a wedding trip to Hawaii and Hong Kong the couple will live in San Francisco.

Pamela Minor Is Engaged To Wed

The engagement of Pamela Minor to Richard L. Brown has been announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Minor of Novato. She is a graduate of Novato High School and attended the College of Marin. She is an Avon products representative and sister of Dru Minor.

Richard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Brown of Novato, is the brother of Mary, Ray and Patty Brown. He also graduated from Novato High School and attended the College of Marin. He is employed by Standard Oil in San Francisco.

Petalumans Plan Wedding

The engagement of Wendy Bishop and Dan Pallo, both of Petaluma, has been announced.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Bishop of Petaluma and the sister of Mrs. Garland May, Pam and Sandy Bishop. A senior at Petaluma High School, she is the granddaughter of Mrs. Hazel Guthrie of Petaluma.

Dan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Pallo of Petaluma. A Petaluma High School graduate, he is employed in Novato.

Casserole

Corn and salmon casserole is good plain or with chicken or mushroom gravy, homemade or canned. Cut kernels from 4 ears of fresh corn, to measure about 2 cups. In a medium bowl combine corn with 1 (7¾-ounce) can of salmon, drained and flaked, ½ cup of soft bread crumbs, ¼ cup of milk, 2 eggs, beaten, 1-3 cup of finely chopped onion, ½ teaspoon of salt, ¼ teaspoon of ground black pepper and ⅛ teaspoon of ground nutmeg; mix thoroughly. Pack mixture into a buttered 8½ by 4½ by 2½-inch loaf pan. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven 60 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Mill Valley Garden Rite

The garden of the Mill Valley home of Mr. and Mrs. James Evans in Mill Valley was the setting for the wedding of Linette Linscott of Fort Worth, Tex., and Ron Abell of San Jose.

For the Tuesday evening ceremony Linette's attendants were her two sisters, Mrs. Richard Eatmon of Lompoc and Mrs. Erik Peterson of Novato. They are the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Merle Linscott of Fort Worth, formerly of San Rafael.

Rick Abell of San Jose was his brother's best man and Erik Peterson of Novato ushered.

A garden reception followed the wedding.

Linette is a graduate of the National Schools in Los Angeles and her husband attended Columbia Christian College in Portland, Ore., and served as a missionary in Sao Palo, Brazil, for two years.

The couple will live in Fort Worth, where the bridegroom will attend college.

Power Situation Called Dangerous

NEW YORK (UPI) — Government and utility industry officials warn that much of the eastern half of the United States and perhaps the entire Midwest will experience some form of power disruption this summer, either a "blackout" or reduced voltage "brownout."

Sharply rising power consumption coupled with a long-term lag in generating capacity has created what the Tennessee Valley Authority is calling "an emergency" situation.

Legislature Votes For Job Equality

The California state legislature has passed a bill barring job discrimination on the basis of sex. The bill, Assembly Bill 22 which was introduced by Assemblyman Charles Warren (Dem.-L.A.), adds the word "sex" to the State Fair Employment Practice Act which now prohibits job discrimination on the basis of race, religion, color, ancestry or national origin.

The Senate voted Thursday 25-6 to pass the bill which is similar to proposals Warren has introduced for four years.

It was returned to the Assembly yesterday for concurrence on an amendment added by the Senate Finance Committee which provides that insurance companies can maintain actuary tables based on sex. Mike Hill, a legislative assistant to Warren said, "Men and women pay different fees on their life insurance right now. At some future time insurance companies will have to lump men and women together and figure a life expectancy figure for the average person."

Another amendment added by the Senate finance committee which would wipe out all state protective labor laws for women was amended out in the Senate, Hill said.

A November Wedding Set

The engagement of Nevin Claire Valentine to Stephen Lamar Saunders of Petaluma has been announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Valentine of Napa.

Nevin was graduated from Napa High School, attends Chico State College and is employed with Pini Hardware in Novato.

Mr. and Mrs. James T. Saunders of Petaluma are Stephen's parents and he is the grandson of Mrs. Norman Saunders, also of Petaluma.

Now assistant manager of Pini Hardware, Stephen was graduated from Petaluma High School, Santa Rosa Junior College and Sacramento State College.

The couple plan a Nov. 1 wedding at St. Peter's Chapel at Mare Island.

Nancy Nobel Is Bride

Nancy Lee Noble became the bride of William Paul Thomas Sunday at the First Presbyterian Church in San Rafael. A reception followed in the garden of the San Rafael home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Noble.

Janet Noble was her sister's maid of honor, and another sister of the bride, Debora Noble, and Pamela Mendenall of Santa Barbara were bridesmaids.

Daniel Scott of Davis was best man, and guests were ushered to their seats by William's brothers, Stephen and Brad Thomas of Torrance; Kent Frugazi of Davis; and Ronald Windell of Torrance.

Nancy is a graduate of San Rafael High School and the University of California at Davis. She is an art teacher at Armijo High School in Fairfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Thomas of Torrance are the bridegroom's parents. William was graduated from Torrance High School and U.C. at Davis, where he is a senior at the school of veterinary medicine.

San Francisco Pays Farewell To Bufano

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—San Franscisco has paid a last farewell to sculptor Benny Bufano, the eccentric little artist found dead of a heart attack in his studio earlier this week.

"Caio, Benny, Caio! You are part of our lives from here on in," said Mayor Joseph Alioto at a requiem mass in St. Patrick's Catholic Church Friday. The city lowered its flags to half staff for rites.

Alioto urged that Bufano's St. Francis of the Guns, made of melted weapons collected after the Sen. Robert F. Kennedy slaying, be installed in the Civic Center.

The statue is now at Expo '70 in Osaka, Japan, and was the subject of Benny's last great quarrel. He said the city owed him $14,500 for the work.

Benny's right name was Beniamino Benvenuto, and he was born near Rome in 1898—or maybe it was 1889. Nobody knew Bufano's exact age.

For decades Bufano scorned religion, but he arranged for a church funeral not long before he was found dead in his studio last Tuesday. His request as for the mayor to give the eulogy "on behalf of the city and on behalf of Benny."

Alioto told the audience of 600 that Bufano always sought to pattern his life after St. Francis of Assisi, the lover of birds and animals and the patron saint of this city.

Bufano's frequent fancies, the mayor said, were a part of his uniqueness. "Sometimes legends speak more than truth," Alioto suggested.

The sculptor, a life-long pacifist, often said he chopped off part of his trigger finger and sent to President Wilson, and at the mass the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Clement J. McKenna said "the great crusade of Bufano's life was for peace."

Friends recalled how the diminutive artist survived perpetual poverty. He lived 25 years for free in the San Francisco Press club and was fed by some restaurants in return for works rendered.

Immunization Fail To Halt Diphtheria Spread

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI) — A week-long immunization drive has failed to slow the spread of diptheria in San Antonio. Health officials fear the epidemic could cover the entire state once school starts.

Four more confirmed cases and 11 suspected cases were reported Friday, bringing to 59 the number of confirmed cases in the city this year. Two persons have died of the disease.

The bulk of the cases have struck in the predominately Mexican-American and Negro west and southwest sides of town, but in the past two days cases also have turned up in other neighborhoods.

"The disease is not seeking any particular street or block," said Dr. William R. Ross, city health director. "It has been like a checkerboard. You never know where it is going to strike next."

Dr. Vernon Knight, chairman of microbiology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, said any Texas school not requiring immunization of school children is "wide open for an epidemic."

More than 83,000 innoculations have been given in San Antonio since the epidemic was officially declared last week. Officials at the municipal auditorium announced they would continue giving shots until 5 p.m. today.

Long lines of people snaked around for blocks outside the auditorium waiting for inoculations. Officials said the lines were moving quickly because more nurses have been added and they are more experienced after a week's work.

State Sen. Chet Brooks said in Houston he will investigate the possibility of legislating statewide immunization requirements for Texas school children.

Such requirements are now set by individual school districts and the rules vary widely.

Budget For Fairfax Is Due Monday

After two months of budget discussions, and almost two months into the new fiscal year, the Fairfax City Council is scheduled to approve a $550,371 budget for 1970-71 at its 8 p.m. meeting Monday.

The figure will hold the city's tax rate at $1.74 per $100 assessed valuation.

The proposed budget presented to the council June 22 by Frances R. Lestanguet, city clerk and administrator, totaled $554,171 and recommended a 15-cent tax rate increase.

After weeks of often heated and sometimes bitter discussion, the council managed to make deletions totaling approximately $6,000 and agreed to use an estimated $17,000 in interest from a gas tax maintenance fund for 1970-71 revenue, and thus was able to avoid the tax increase.

Also on Monday's agenda is the question of hiring a full-time city administrator. The council voted Aug. 6 to hire an administrator and reaffirmed that vote four days later. However, the mechanics of hiring were put off until Monday.

Franklin D. Roosevelt was the first president to make a speech of acceptance at a nominating convention.

Small Craft Harbor Report To Be Studied

The Mill Valley Planning Commission will meet with the city's parks and recreation commission Monday at 8 p.m. at city hall to consider a feasibility report for the development of the city's small craft harbor.

In other business, the planning commission will consider William E. Cullen's proposal to build 64 condominium units on 32 acres on Warner Ridge. The matter was continued from Aug. 10 after a motion to approve the project died for lack of a second.

The commission also will review the city council's rejection on Monday of an application by Trans-Marin Properties to rezone a parcel of land at La Goma Street and Sycamore Avenue to permit construction of about 85 apartments. The commission approved the rezoning at its last meeting.

BRAND NEW

We're really proud to present this architect designed charmer for the first time this weekend. It's perfectly located close to everything and it's just a short walk to town. But it has perfect privacy, and there's nothing to be seen from any of the rooms but an unspoiled view of trees and hills. There's a big living room with a beamed ceiling a big rock fireplace and sliding doors to wide tree-top decks. An all-electric kitchen. Two bedrooms and a den, a bath and a half. All redwood with a shake roof. Priced right at $35,000.

HERE'S A COMPROMISE!

Looking for a home in a top area, with 3 or 4 bedrooms, 2 baths, a fun family room, utility room, level front and rear patios AND a Bay view? Finding that for this type and quality of home the prices are astronomical? Here's the reason this home can be bought so reasonable — highway noise. Most of the problem has been solved, however, by a wrap-around, glass-enclosed deck. Consider it a minor annoyance in return for so much quality living. $41,900.

Sugar Plant Tankers Are Let To Pass

CROCKETT (UPI) —A truce of sorts has been called in the strike at the California and Hawaii Sugar Co. plant.

Pickets agreed Friday to allow eight tank cars loaded with 80,000 gallons of liquid sugar to leave the company's Crockett plant for Del Monte Corp. in Oakland which is preparing to can this summer's peach crop.

In return, the company promised to stop loading and shipping sugar until a strike settlement is reached. The Sugar Workers Union has been on strike since June 1 in a labor contract dispute.

Two nights ago, Contra Costa Sheriff's deputies and police were called out when several windows in one building were broken and administrative employes' cars vandalized.

After a meeting with union officials early Friday, a company spokesman said, "we decided that this will not get anywhere, so no more sugar cars will be shipped or loaded until we get an agreement."

Sheriff's deputies guarding the tank cars said they arrested one picket for being drunk and disorderly.

CH's dispute with the union centers around a union demand for cost-of-living increases. There have been no contract negotiations since Aug. 13 and no talks are scheduled.

Marinites To Attend Session

Three Marin County participants in a nationwide "Walk for Hunger" will attend a special coordinating conference Tuesday in St. Paul, Minn.

Attending will be Colleen Fitzhenry of Kentfield, Annette Lareau of Fairfax and Robert Morgen of San Anselmo.

The "Walk for Hunger," sponsored by the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, will be held Sept. 20. In Marin County, a walk will start at Redwood High School in Larkspur at 7 a.m. and follow circuitous, 20-mile route throughout Southern Marin.

Walkers will be paid for mileage they travel and proceeds will go to the foundation, foreign antihunger efforts and the county's supplemental food program.

Three To Take Part In Session

Three Marinites will take part in the California state conference and membership meeting of the U.S. Humane Society Sept. 19-20 in Pasadena.

Dr. Virgil S. Hollis, county schools superintendent, will moderate a panel discussion. Mrs. Pat Sherman, past project director of county schools, will make a multi-media presentation.

Mel Morse, executive director of the Marin Humane Society, will serve as master of ceremonies at an awards banquet.

LAW IN ACTION

From the State Bar Of California

Conversion And Accession

In "conversion" someone takes another's personal property, depriving him of his control of possession. It may be innocent as when someone mistakenly takes a raincoat or he finds that he has bought a stolen item. Still, an "innocent converter" must hand over the item to its rightful owner.

"Accession" happens when the converter does something to increase the value of the item. Suppose Brown who innocently buys a used car stolen from Green spends money on it to increase its value. The true owner, Green, learning that Brown has his car, can claim it.

Before California courts decide such a case they want to know if the conversion was innocent or willful. If innocent, the court then wants to know which is the greater, the improvement or the item's original value.

If improvements are greater, then the "converter" keeps the item and pays the original owner for the basic item. Otherwise, the original owner pays for the improvements and gets his item back.

As for the stolen car, if Brown merely put on new tires and seat covers, then he must return the car to the original owner and in turn get repaid for what he spent. But if he reworked the whole car, and his improvements exceed the car's basic value, then Brown could keep the car and pay the first owner for what the value of the car had been.

But Brown gets no protection if he knew that the car had been stolen. The owner can get his property plus improvements for nothing. Indeed he might also make Brown pay damages for depriving him of the use of his car.

"Confusion" means that goods owned by different persons are so intermingled that nobody can ascertain his separate interests. If the confusion is innocent, the owners become "tenants in common" in the property.

Petaluma Taxes To Be Discussed

Recommendations for new city taxes and sources of income will be considered at an adjourned session of the Petaluma City Council Monday at 7:30 p.m.

A citizens finance committee has offered suggestions for added revenue, including increased parking fees.

The council will also review an ordinance that would permit farm animals to be maintained within the city limits.

Kimmel Among Nine To Plead On Drug Counts

James David Kimmel, former Novato High School teacher, and eight others are scheduled to enter pleas Wednesday in Southern Sonoma Municipal Court to charges of cultivating and possessing marijuana.

Kimmel, 34, and his wife, Carol Lee, 36, were arrested Aug. 12 at their Sonoma Valley home when Sonoma County sheriff's deputies said they found 500 marijuana plants growing there. Judge Alexander J. McMahon released the defendants on their own recognizance.

Others charged are Quinn Brant Berry, 27; Lynn E. Berry, 21; Richard Melvin Romelli, 28; Shirley Romelli, 25; Gene Leland Barrot, 22; Jeffrey D. Ross, 22, and Robert William Prushko, 18. The seven gave city of Sonoma addresses.

Sentencing Set In Check Case

Richard Anthony Alonzo, 18, of no known address, has been ordered to appear in Marin Superior Court Aug. 31 for setting of a sentencing date on a charge of possessing a check with intent to defraud others.

Alonzo, at a municipal court preliminary hearing yesterday on two check possession counts, pleaded guilty to one of them and the other was dismissed.

Alonzo was arrested by San Rafael police July 23 and accused of passing fraudulent checks in a tavern.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

By DR. THEODORE R. VAN DELLEN

Tender Tissue, Inflamed Veins Cause Hemorrhoidal Discomfort

Hemor rhoidal veins are in an area where they are subjected to constant irritation and injury. Slight tears in the membranes of the lower rectum and anal region are followed by bacterial invasion and inflammation. These veins have thin walls and are susceptible to infection, swelling and rupture. Most infections are so mild they are overlooked because the slight rectal soreness is present for a day or two and complete healing occurs.

The internal hemorrhoidal veins are in the lining of the anal canal. Soreness and discomfort occur when they become inflamed. Straining at stool leads to a painful protrusion of the inflamed vein, and now and then blood is noted. Here, too, local anesthetic ointments offer temporary relief. Shrinking agents have been advocated but are not always successful. Cold packs followed in 6 to 10 hours by a series of hot sitz baths are effective.

CURE IS POSSIBLE when the entire plexus of veins is removed. Injection treatments help when hemorrhoids are small, but these have to be repeated at intervals to control the condition. This process is troublesome and time-consuming.

PERSPIRES HEAVILY

W. R. writes: Is the person who perspires less in warm humid weather more comfortable than the heavy sweater?

REPLY

Yes, but not if he wears the heavy sweater. When the humidity is high, the air is saturated with water. As a result, perspiration does not evaporate from the surface as readily as when the air is dry. Then the heavy sweater is at a disadvantage.

On the other hand, he will appreciate a breeze which will cool him off. In contrast, the person who does not sweat at all is miserable under these circumstances and usually overheats and develops a fever.

MEAT AND WEARINESS

M. C. writes: If I eat more meat, will it help overcome my fatigue?

REPLY

It might, provided your present meat intake is low. The important aspect of your question is: Why are you fatigued? Send stamped, self-addressed envelope for our leaflet on fatigue.

LOOSENED FINGERNAILS

Mrs. A. L. writes: What causes lifting or loosening of the fingernails from the nail bed? Is there a cure?

REPLY

Injury and infection are the most common culprits and cure depends upon the cause of the nail disorder.

ALLERGY AND CANCER

A. P. writes: Is an allergic person more susceptible to cancer than others?

REPLY

No.

Southern Marin—All Kinds Of Things, Places, People

The diversity of Sausalito and its neighbors is evident in this aerial photo. Highway 101, starting at bottom left, winds through the brushy heights of Waldo Grade, past uncompleted Sausalito apartments and troubled Martin Luther King School, past Marin City's apartment buildings, to disappear across Richardson Bay. Bridgeway enters from lower right to lead the eye past posh apartments, Marinship's industry and dilapidation, the Oriental sprawl of houseboats and marine life at Gates 5 and 6, and the Waldo heliport at the foot of the Richardson Bay Bridge. Across the bay at upper right on tree-dotted hills is the campus of Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary. Da Silva Island, scene of Marin's most famous pot bust, the Werber case, is the woods-shrouded spot at the north end of the bridge at top. At center, a large scratched-over open space marks the former site of the American Distillery, now being transformed into apartments. Just north of the distillery site is the big paved playground of Martin Luther King School. To left of the distillery site are seen the clustered portable buildings of Bayside School, Bayside's baseball diamond, the Sausalito School District office, and old Bayside School, now the Sausalito Art Center. In Rpchardson Bay, the chaotic sprawl of Gate 5's houseboats contrasts sharply with the neatly serried ranks of sailboats, motor yachts and fiberglass pleasure craft lying sedately at their Clipper Yacht Harbor moorings. Paralleling Bridgeway, then plunging off through the marsh toward Mill Valley, is the spur line of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad. In the foreground, an arabesque of new streets lies unused, awaiting future development to accommodate more Sausalitans.

Bible Verse Relative To Today's Youth

By LOUIS CASSELS
UPI Religion Writer

There is a verse of Scripture which every parent should commit to memory.

It's found in the Old Testament in the 16th Chapter of the First Book of Samuel: "The Lord sees not as man sees. Man looks on the outward appearance, but the Lord looks on the heart."

Many a harsh family row might be avoided if parents could learn to look on their children as the Lord does: focusing not on the outward appearance but on the heart.

Being bald and middle-aged, I have no difficulty understanding why people of my generation are put off by some of the hair styles and clothing now in vogue among young people.

What I cannot comprehend is why otherwise-intelligent adults should attach such overriding importance to what is, after all, a question of taste, not a basic moral issue.

Last week, in Washington, D. C., a congressman learned that his son had been arrested and jailed on a charge of marijuana possession. Never mind the Congressman's name. He and the boy have already suffered enough, and if you missed the first spate of publicity which the incident received, I'm not going to identify them again now.

What deserves attention is a statement which the congressman made to the press at the time that he posted $2,500 bond to secure his 19-year-old son's release from jail.

He said he had told his son, "I'll give you one chance, and give you written conditions. If you break them, I'll put you back in jail."

And what were the written conditions? The lawmaker listed them as follows:

His son must "get his hair cut, and short, and now."

He must "keep himself shaved."

He must "visit a professional barber" at least once every 10 days.

He must not "wear hippie clothes."

He must return to school (from which he dropped out two years ago).

He must avoid use of drugs.

No parent could quarrel with the last two admonitions—that the young man go back to school and lay off drugs. They are clearly aimed at protecting his welfare in essential respects.

But note, please, that the first four of the six "written conditions" were entirely concerned with the youth's outward appearance.

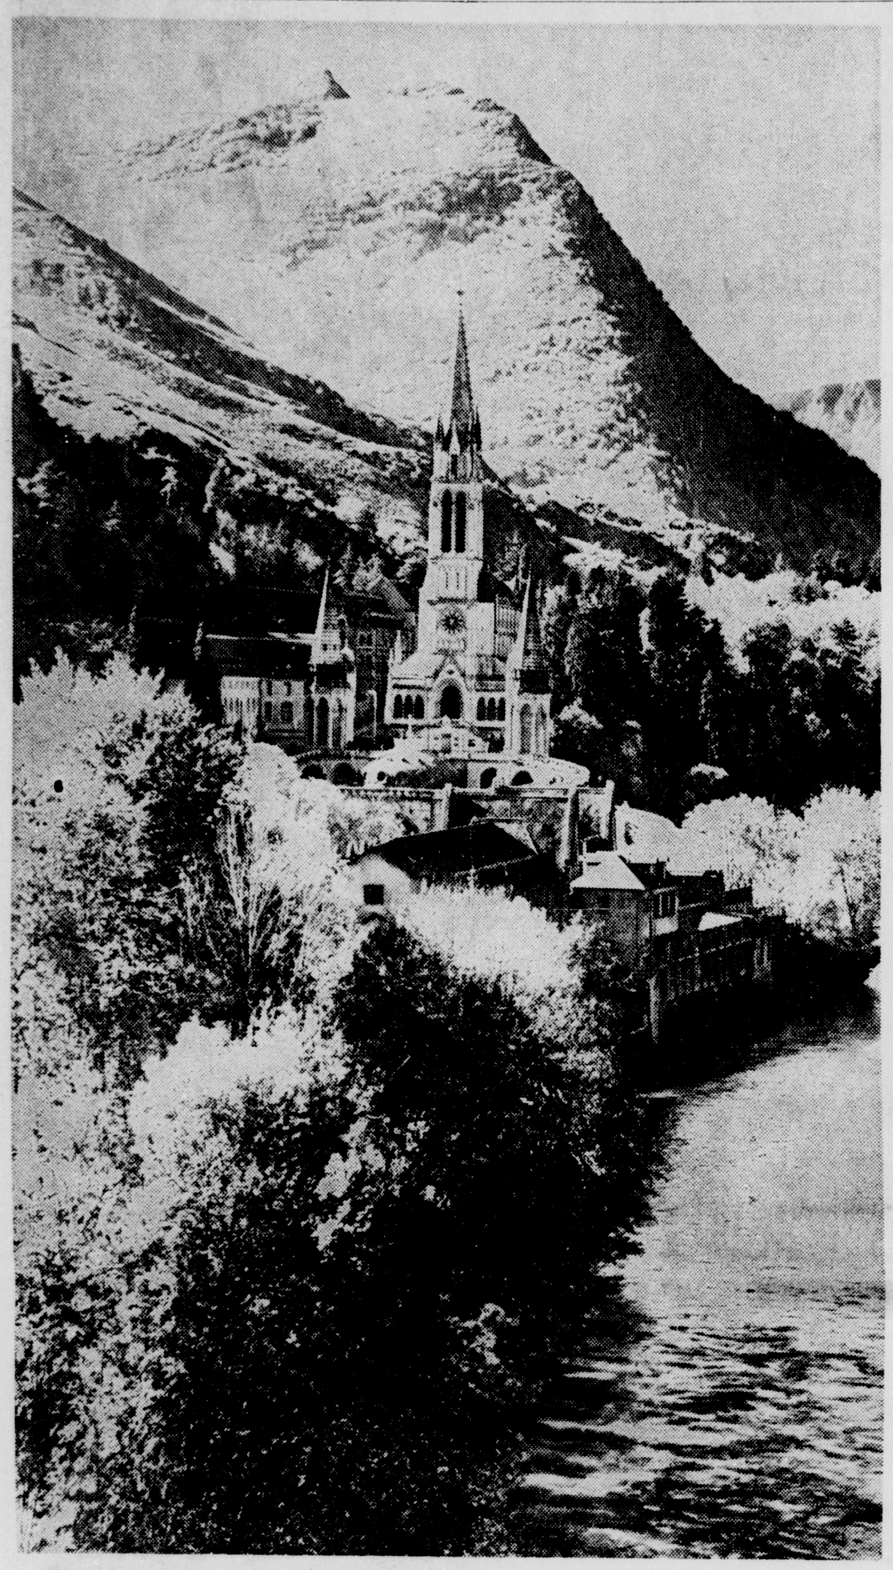
It staggers credulity that it should be necessary to point it out, but perhaps it is necessary: long hair is neither more nor less moral, neither more nor less acceptable in the sight of God, neither more nor less manly if you want to put it on that basis, than short hair, or no hair at all.

There may be some validity to the widely held adult belief that children tend to behave as they dress—that is, to live up to the roles for which they are costumed. To the degree that is true,

But any trouble a child is apt to get into from dressing up like a "hippie" is not a patch on the disasters that can result from total estrangement from his parents.

When young people see their parents making a big fuss over a superficial and relatively trivial thing, such as hair length, they find it difficult to take seriously the other "values" which their parents commend to them.

Much better a long-haired, well-loved child than one who has a neat crewcut and a heart full of bitterness.



ON TOUR — During the announced October tour of Europe, which will be directed by Rev. Michael D. Harriman of Marin, one of the major points of interest will be Lourdes, which is visited annually by more than three million pilgrims. Father Harriman will say a Mass in the grotto.

Marin Priest Will Direct European Tour In October

A three week autumn air tour of Europe has been announced by Rev. Michael D. Harriman of St. Isabella's Parish in Terra Linda.

Father Harriman is Marin County co-ordinator of youth services for the Archdiocese of San Francisco, as well as Catholic chaplain of Marin County Juvenile Hall.

Under his direction the tour will fly across the Atlantic on Oct. 12 to visit principal scenes of Catholic interest in Ireland, France, Italy, Austria, and England.

From Shannon the party will travel through the "ring of Kerry" and Killarney, Adare, Blarney, Cork, Limerick, and Galway.

Father Harriman will celebrate a pilgrims' Mass at the shrine of Knock, in County Mayo, where the Virgin Mary appeared outside the parish church nearly 90 years ago.

After visiting Dublin, the group will fly to Lourdes, there to join in devotions with thousands of other pilgrims from all over the world. From there the group will fly to Italy.

"Italy has more faces than any other country in Europe," says Father Harriman. "They include those of the Roman empire and the renaissance; those of grand opera, industry and fashion."

The group's first full day in Rome will begin with Mass at St. Peter's followed by a detailed examination of the interior of the vast structure, and an audience with Pope Paul VI.

Leaving Rome the group will stop for a noonday Mass and visit at Assisi, the birthplace of St. Francis. The next stop will be Florence.

By way of Bologna and the shrine of St. Anthony of Padua, the group will arrive at Venice where Father Harriman's Sunday Mass will be celebrated in the historic basilica of St. Mark.

Over the snow-capped Alps the travelers will fly to Vienna and drive to the nearby shrine of Mariazell. Then they will fly direct to London.

The tour will conclude with a medieval banquet in the great hall of the castle at Bunratty, Ireland.

Information about tour membership may be obtained from Father Harriman at St. Isabella's rectory.

Head Of Akbar College Will Play At Church

Ali Akbar Khan, president of Ali Akbar College, will present classical music of North India at 9:30 a.m. services tomorrow at the Methodist Church of Mill Valley.

Khan, playing the sarod, will be accompanied by Shankar Ghosh on the tabla (drums).

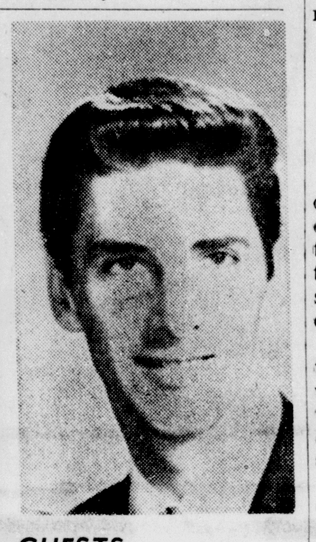
Ali Akbar College is known throughout the United States for its outstanding curriculum in North Indian music.

Rev. George P. Carter, pastor, said those attending tomorrow's service should "let themselves go and enter into a world dominated by the (to us) strange sounds of the sitar and other Indian instruments."

"If we can free ourselves to enter that world of music and meditation, who knows where the Spirit will lead us?"

He added the service is open to the public.

Of the culture presented in the music, Khan has said: "Our sages developed music from time immemorial for the mind to take shelter in the pure being which stands apart from the bond as one's true self. Real music is not for wealth, not for honors or even the joys of the mind . . . but as a path for realization and salvation."



SPECIAL GUESTS

Adron and Patti Lockyer, gospel singers, recording artists and evangelists, will be special guests at 11 a.m. tomorrow at the North Marin Assembly of God, 1370 South Novato Boulevard in Novato. The Lockyers will present a program of contempory and traditional music and ministry.

Vatican Eases Requirements For Joining Monastic Orders

VATICAN CITY (UPI)—The Vatican has relaxed requirements for entry into monastic life under newly released regulations that permit nuns and monks greater freedom of movement.

Vatican officials said this week the regulations have been in effect since they were approved by Pope Paul VI on June 1. June 1.

Tedious bishops' investigations of the background and motives of persons entering religious life have been streamlined. A bishop no longer is required to make a full month inquiry to discover whether an aspiring nun is being forced or deceived into a convent. This outdated regulation was imposted in previous centuries when parents sometimes tried to force unmarried daughters into convents.

Aspiring novices no longer need a testimonial from the bishop of every diocese in which they have lived since the age of 14, a bureaucratic procedure now recognized as usually unnecessary.

Religious persons now may become superiors at the age of 35 instead of 40, and novice masters at 30 instead of 35.

Nuns have been formally permitted to make outings without permission of their superiors each time.

$250,000 Emergency Relief Fund For Peruvian Quake

NEW YORK (LC) — The board of directors of Lutheran World Relief has set aside $250,000 for emergency relief, rehabilitation, and reconstruction in Peru, according to an announcement issued here late in July.

Bernard A. Confer, executive secretary of the overseas aid agency, said $50,000 has been transmitted to the earthquake-wracked region for local purchase of agricultural and construction tools and "sorely needed" roofing materials.

It was the second time since the earthquake struck late in May that the agency forwarded funds. Shortly after the disaster, it forwarded $5,000 for the purchase of emergency supplies and transportation.

Both grants, Confer said, have been sent through Church World Service, "which had a core staff in the country when the earthquake struck and has since greatly expanded program to meet emergency requirements."

In addition to the funds, he continued, LWR has made available more than 3,000 kits composed of toilet articles and educational items for use by children in region devastated by the quake.

Also noted were the shipments of 3,500 blankets by air and 10,000 blankets by sea within two weeks after the earthquake. Like the funds, the blankets were channeled through CWS, Mr. Confer explained.

CWS, the overseas relief arm of the National Council of Churches, has been allotted two areas in the disaster zone under a coordination effort by the groups engaged in relief and rehabilitation.

The two areas encompass Huarmey and Aija and extend from the seacoast to an elevation of 16,000 feet. Inhabited by some 65,000 persons, a majority of whom are Quechua Indians, the two areas are about the size of Rhode Island.

Lutherans Report Membership Loss

NEW YORK — (LC) — Lutheran church bodies in North America sustained an overall loss of 16,058 members and the denomination's total membership dropped to 9,223,216 at the close of 1969, it was reported this week by the Lutheran Council in the USA.

An annual summary of statistics supplied by the various branches of Lutheranism disclosed a constituency of 8,919,526 baptized children and adults in the United States — a loss of 24,381 or .27 per cent — and of 303,690 in Canada — a gain of 8,323 or 2.81 per cent.

Baha'i Faith To Explain Philosophy

The Baha'i Faith of Larkspur will sponsor a public meeting at 8 p.m. Monday in the Larkspur Town Hall on "What Is A Baha'i."

Guest speakers will be Victor Tom and Harry Johnson.

MANY MISGUIDED

American Prelate Defends Curia

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — American Cardinal John J. Wright thinks people have got the wrong idea about the Curia, the Roman Catholic church's central government, where he works.

"They think of the Curia as a great sociological beast," the former Bishop of Pittsburgh said in an interview. "They regard it as an undersirable accretion to the gospel and to the primitive church."

But Wright, 60, looking back on his first year as the first American to head a Curia department, said the organization is a necessity to the church.

"There are those who have decided, for reasons I have never been able to grasp entirely, that the church should be decentralized," Wright said. "They say everything is in the hands of the Curia.

"Well, the Pope is the head of the church. He can't do all the work by himself, so he has these bureaus and commissions and congregations which we call the Curia."

Wright's department is the Congregation for the Clergy, which looks after parish priests around the world.

In any case, Wright said, local churches are taking over many of the tasks once done by the Curia in line with the Vatican Ecumenical Council's call for individual bishops to share in policy making. And the Curia, once solidly dominated by Italians, is becoming more international.

"I used to think the result of all this would be that there would be less mail," Wright said. "I've been gravely disillusioned," he added, eyeing a stack of letters on his desk.

"The bishop of the brand new diocese in Frica who would probably have written in once a year to ask what the Pope thinks about such and such, now writes to ask us to find out what all the other bishops are doing about whatever is the subject in hand.

"The result is an enormous amount of paperwork. "The Curia has become a kind of clearing house."

The cardinal said he would prefer pastoral duties to the office work that occupies much of his time here. But it was a very small complaint.

"The truth is I just love living in Rome," he said.

"I don't merely mean the Rome of the popes. I like the Rome of Virgil and Horace, the legendary Rome and all its surrounding little hill towns."

Wright's office is directly across from the Pope's windows, overlooking St. Peter's Square.

Pointing to the vast basilica across the square, he said:

"But this is the Rome I love best of all . . . the place where Christianity came alive."

At his comfortably furnished apartment a short walk away Wrighty relaxes with his hobbies — a collection of books and manuscripts about St. Joan of Arc which is reputed to be the most complete in the world, and a collection of records which leans heavily to what he calls "Mediterranean" composers: Verdi, Donizetti, Puccini, plus Mozart and Richard Strauss.

Vatican Issues New Policy On Patron Saints

VATICAN CITY (UPI)—Nations and religious organizations are barred from adopting more than one patron saint under new Vatican instructions downgrading the worship of Instructions published Friday by the Congregation for Divine Worship ordained an end to flamboyant language used to describe saints on days set aside for them.

At least 19 nations have more than one patron saint. The ruling exempts existing situations, but the Vatican indicated it would prefer that nations and religious organizations conform to the one-patron rule.

MARIN POP WARNER TEAMS PREPARE FOR SEASON OPENER

More than 700 boys ages 10-14 play Pop Warner League football in Marin County. This year a new team, the San Marin Mustangs, will join the Marin league. The Mustangs have been practicing five nights a week at San Marin High School in preparation for the start of the season Sept. 12. One of the team's prospects is halfback Larry Dauernheim, shown, at left, carrying the ball during a scrimmage, and, center, leading the offensive backs in a sprint. Man Who Should Know Favors The N.Y. Mets

Larry Jansen still feels that the Mets will win it again in the National League East. He believes Met pitching will shape up in the September stretch drive for the pennant.

"Pitching still is the name of the game," said Jansen in the way all pitching coaches talk about baseball.

Jansen doesn't know why Met pitching hasn't asserted itself before this. But he does know why pitching problems haven't been confined to a few teams this season.

"It's the dead ball," said Jansen in an ironical tone that gave an exact opposite meaning to his statement.

Long before anybody else suspected a rabbit ball had been surreptitously slipped into the majors this year by baseball brass, Jansen spotted it in the season opening series between the Giants and Braves at Atlanta.

Jansen cut one of the new balls open and discovered it not only was wrapped tighter but that the inside of the cover was smeared with a rubberized glue which fixed the cover firmly to the binding.

What Will They Think Of Next?

"What will they think of next?" asked Jansen. "They narrowed the strike zone. They lowered the mound. Now they have that dead ball. It's about time they did something for the pitchers."

Jansen is a pitching coach whose reputation as a most capable instructor must be soul satisfying to him. But he seldom talks about himself. He will talk about the young and old Giant pitchers he instructs.

Gaylord Perry speaks glowingly about Jansen. Perry credits Jansen for making a pitcher out of him. "I was just a thrower until Larry changed my three-quarter delivery into one from over-the-top," said Perry. "That was several years ago."

The sound pitching principles Perry learned from Jansen made it possible for the rangy righthander to survive a strict crackdown this season on the supersinker Perry had been throwing.

There were skeptics who thought Perry would become just another .500 pitcher after being deprived of the supersinker which, of course, everybody knew was a grease ball.

Supersinker With A New Name

There still are skeptics who think the forkball Perry now throws actually is his old supersinker with a new name. But the fact is thta Perry began experimenting with the forkball last spring — just in case there was a crackdown on his supersinker.

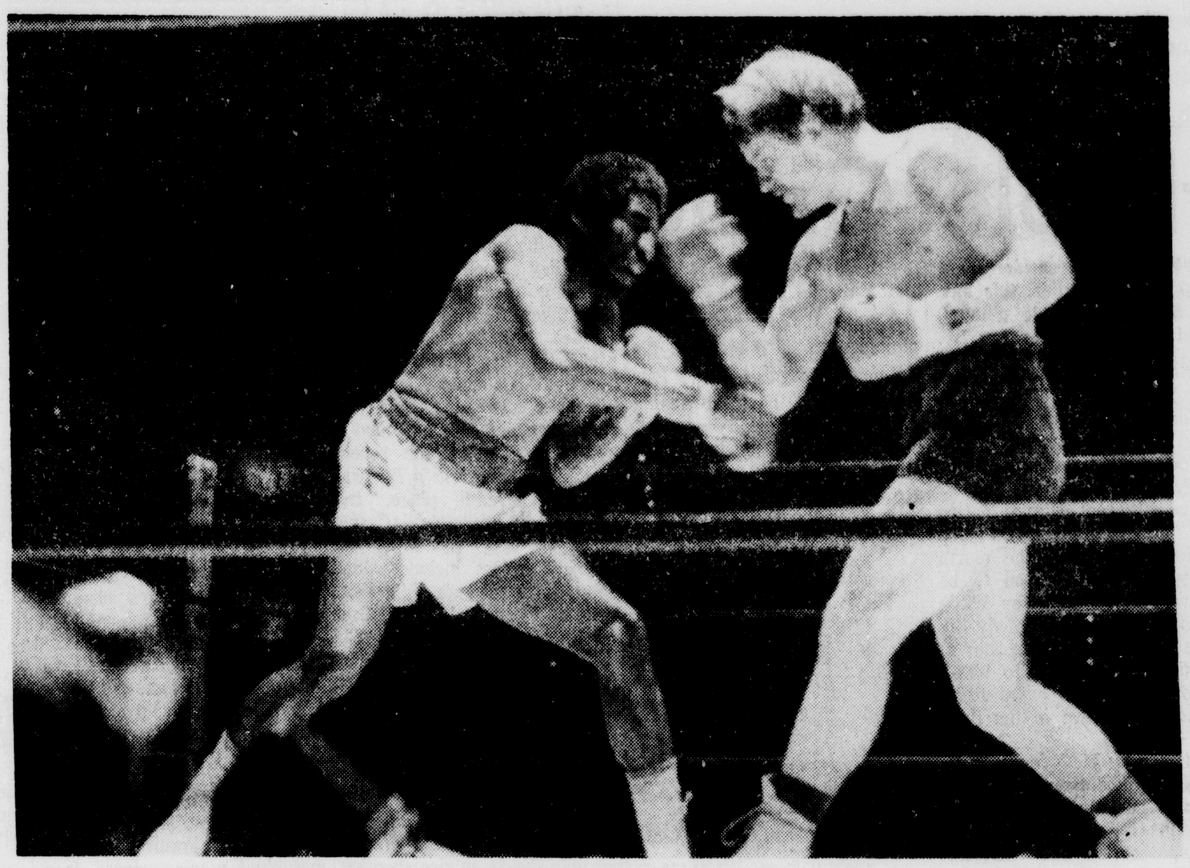
Maybe Perry does cut loose an occasional supersinker now in a tight jam but he no longer relies on it the way he once did. There was a time when 90 per cent of his pitches were supersinkers.

Perry never would have been able to make the switch from a supersinker pitcher to the one he now is without the basics Jansen taught him.

It was only a natural development that Jansen's reputation should win him offers from other clubs. He refuses to make any comment whatsoever about them. He's a quiet man about such things.

Bob Howsam, the man behind-the-scenes of Cincinnati's success this season, is one baseball executive aware of Jansen's talents. Howsam tride during the winter to get Jansen as pitching coach for the Reds.

A man with such a reputation as Jansen's should know what he is talking about when he says the Mets will win it again with their pitching.



ONE BRIGHT MOMENT

Fraser Scott (right), got in a good punch to the head of Luis Rodriguez during the first round of their middleweight fight Thursday night in Seattle. Rodriguez was not fazed, however, and the contender for Nino Benvenuti's world crown went on to take a 10-round decision over young Scott. (UPI telephoto)

Spurrier Returns To Scene Of Prime—49ers Vs. Miami

MIAMI (UPI)—Quarterback Steve Spurrier hopes to avoid another abortive homecoming performance tonight when the San Francisco 49ers meet the Miami Dolphins.

Spurrier, a former All America at the University of Florida, failed last weekend in Tampa, Fla., to punch across a winning touchdown drive as the Niners lost their opening preseason contest to the Cleveland Browns.

The soft-speaking four-year pro gets an opportunity for the second straight game to show his stuff to fellow Floridians. Again, however, Spurrier will have to wait until the second half when 14-year pro John Brodie has finished his duties as the No. 1 signal caller.

Spurrier connected on 12 of 19 passes against the Browns but was foiled time and again during the second half in his efforts to snap a 10-10 deadlock. The Browns beat him to it for the decisive margin.

TV DOUBLEHEADER

Television professional football fans will have a doubleheader tonight with the 49er-Miami (5 o'clock) and the Oakland-Los Angeles (8 o'clock) games to be carried by Channel 2.

Bill Tucker and Jimmy Thomas will start behind Brodie and Spurrier once again in the backfield. Regulars Ken Willard and Doug Cunningham both are injured.

Guards Elmer Collett and Kevin Hardy and defensive end Stan Hindman also are expected to remain on the bench with injuries. Cas Banaszek says he wants to start at his usual tackle spot, but the three-year pro from Northwestern will have to overcome a bad shoulder.

The Dolphins, unbeaten under new coach Don Shula, should have a little extra motivation for tonight's exhibition. Now entering their fifth season, the Dolphins never have won more than two games in a row.

Scrambling Bob Griese hopes to give the Niner defensive line as much trouble as he caused the Cincinnati Bengals last weekend. Griese ripped the Bengals for 15 completions in 19 attempts for a 20-10 victory.

Rams Favored Over Raiders

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The Los Angeles Rams, unbeaten in their first two exhibition starts, are listed as five-point favorites to beat the Oakland Raiders before an expected crowd of 65,000 at the Coliseum tonight.

Roman Gabriel, who sat out the Rams' 17-10 win over Dallas last weekend, will be back at quarterback for coach George Allen's club.

Gabriel, last year's most valuable player in the National Football League, is matched against Oakland quarterback Daryle Lamonica, the 1969 American Football League MVP.

The Raiders lost to Baltimore 33-21 in their exhibition opener but came back to trim Philadelphia 30-19 last weekend.

Gabriel ran for one touchdown and passed for another as Los Angeles started the season with a 30-17 victory against Cleveland. But the nine-year pro aggravated his right knee in the pregame warmups last Saturday night and watched from the sidelines as the Rams' No. 2 quarterback, Karl Sweetan, passed for a pair of touchdowns in Los Angeles' win over the Cowboys.

Raider coach John Madden has indicated he will use Ken Stabler, the team's No. 2 signal caller, in the second half against the Rams.

In five preseason quarters, Stabler, from Alabama, has hit 27 of 39 passes for six touchdowns.

For Los Angeles, rookie quarterback John Walton, who played last year with Indianapolis in the Continental Football League, and was that league's most valuable player, is expected to play the entire second quarter.

Although the Rams are favored to beat the former AFL club, now a member of the Western Division of the American Football Conference, they will be minus Larry Smith and Willie Ellison. Both have hamstring pulls.

Los Angeles has won five of its seven meetings against old AFL teams while Oakland has lost five of seven encounters against NFL clubs including its 1968 Super Bowl defeat to Green Bay.

Pender To Coach At West Point

WEST POINT, N.Y. (UPI) — Capt. Mel Pender, former Olympic gold medal sprinter, has been assigned to the U.S. Military Academy as assistant track and field coach.

At West Point, Pender will assist Army track coach Carleton Crowell with the cross country squad and the indoor and outdoor track teams.

The fomrer Atlanta, Ga., athlete competed in Olympic Games competition in Tokyo and Mexico City.

900 Series For Silva

Walt Silva led all Marin County bowlers last week as he fired a 900 series at Country Club Bowl in San Rafael. The top woman was Val Heffelfinger who rolled a 603 series at Nave Lanes in Ignacio.

Rich McPherson led all juniors for the second straight week with a 591 at Country Club.

A'S LOSE

Mudcat's Magic World Collapses

CLEVELAND (UPI) — The magic world of Mudcat Grant is looking a little pedestrian these days.

The 35-year-old righthander had been the most consistently effective reliever in baseball until a couple of weeks ago. H took another shelling Friday night as the Oakland A's fell to the Cleveland Indians, 6-3.

Grant came to the mound in the eighth inning with Cleveland leading 4-3. Then, boom! Home runs by Ted Uhlaender and Vada Pinson, plus another basehit, sent the Mudcat to the dugout early. He retired only one man.

The sudden collapse of Grant is not exactly the greatest thing that could happen to the A's, who already were having their troubles keeping in step with first place Minnesota. The Twins' victory Friday night shoved Oakland 6 1-2 games behind in the American League West.

Jim Hunter, the slumping starter of Oakland's four-man rotation, failed for the fifth time in a row to claim victory No. 16. He lasted seven innings, only to see his record fall to 15-11.

Hunter, haunted career-long by home runs from enemy bats, served up a couple more gopher balls Friday night. Duke Sims crashed a three-run job in the opening inning and Roy Foster did it with the bags empty in the sixth. In between, the Catfish set down 14 Cleveland batters in succession.

Staked to an early 3-0 lead, Indian starter Sam McDowell had more leeway than he really needed. Sudden Sam has not lost to the A's since 1968. He left the game with a reinjured thigh muscle but stayed around long enough to run his record to 18-8.

McDowell looked like a mere mortal in the second inning when Hunter blasted a home run and Tommy Davis drove in another run with a double.

The A's had another opportunity to take the lead in the eighth. Trailing 4-2, they rallied for a run off reliever Dean Chance. Tenace brought the tally in with a single, putting men on first and third with one out. But reliever Rick Austin came in to get Frank Fernandez to pop out and Tony LaRussa to look at three strikes.

Marin Swimmers Compete In U.S. Championships

Robin Bachrach of the Dolphins of Marin and Denise Ham of the Marin Aquatic Club were scheduled to compete today in the 200-meter butterfly as the national AAU Senior National Swimming Championships went into their third day at the Los Angeles Swim Stadium.

Miss Bachrach, the only one of five Marin County swimmers entered in the meet who saw action yesterday, finished out of the running in the 400 individual medley. Her time of 5:33.20 was five seconds off her best clocking in the event.

In tommorow's final day of competition, Miss Bachrach and Miss Ham will swim in the 200 I.M. and Miss Ham will join MAC members Jo and Kathy Hislop and Ann Engel in the 400 freestyle relay.

Marin Team Ousted In Softball

NAPA — Defending champion Stornetta's Dairy of Napa gained revenge for an earlier tourney defeat by eliminating Sohner Tree Service of San Anselmo from the California State Softball Tournament last night, 4-0.

Gary Coleen pitched a no-hitter and Stornetta leftfielder Dave Rawlins broke open a scoreless tie with a two-out bases loaded single in the sixth inning.

The Dairymen iced the contest with another pair of runs in the seventh off losing hurler Walt Tyler.

The only two hard-hit balls by the San Anselmo team were Run Blume's line drive to the pitcher in the fourth and Carrol Stephens' long fly to left in the seventh.

Although playing with a make-shift lineup due to injuries which have plagued them in recent weeks, the Treemen came up with several sparkling plays in the early innings to bail Tyler out of trouble.

The line score:

Stornetta	000 002 2	4	7 0
Sohner	000 000 0	0	0 0

BLUEPRINT FOR BUFFALO VICTORY

Buffalo Bills wide receiver Marlin Briscoe was nailed by Philadelphia cornerback Ray Jones on the Eagles' one yard line after taking a pass from quarterback Jim Harris to set up the first touchdown of an exhibition game lsat night at touchdown of an exhibition game last night at Buffalo. The Bills went on to win, 35-20. (UPI telephoto)

Millionaire Billy Casper In Line For A Big Check

He Leads The Avco Tournament

SUTTON, Mass. (UPI)—Billy Casper is already one of the Internal Revenue Service's favorite people. And the way he's going, he'll be right up there with J. Paul Getty.

Mr. Casper, already classified as a millionaire from California, has put a hammer lock on the Avco Golf Classic, clearly pointing for the $32,000 first prize and the upper, upper bracket.

Casper ghosted away from the field at crowded Pleasant Valley Country Club Friday, firing a five-under 67 that promoted him from two strokes off the pace into a three-stroke lead.

The 39-year-old pro tour veteran from Bonita, Calif., actually enjoyed a four-stroke lead for most of the day but a late charge by fellow Californian Chuck Courtney slashed the lead to three as Casper bids for his fourth tournament win of the year and the 47th of his spectacular 15 year career.

Both Casper and the bespectacled Courtney credited their putting, the latter noting "that's the name of his game," as they took over from faltering opening day leader Dan Sikes.

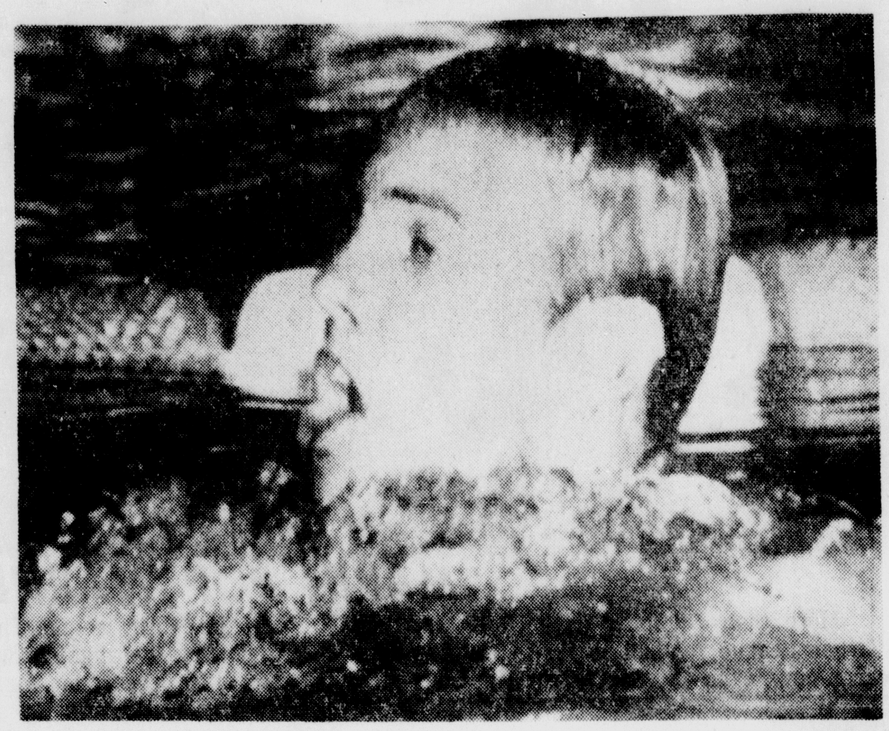
Sikes, the Florida attorney whose first day 66 was matched by both Courtney and Jim Wiechers in a continuing assault on par Friday, faded to a two-over 74 in the second round and landed in a five-way tie for seventh place, five strokes off the rich Casper pace.

Other leaders included Juan "Antonio" Rodriguez Villa Vega Medina Figueroa de la Cruz Perez, better known as "Chi Chi", who was tied for third with Tom Weiskopf, Lou Graham and Jim at 139.

Then came Dan Sikes bracketed with R.H. Sikes, Art Wall, Bob Mitchell and Larry Ziegler, all at 140.

The pro assault on Pleasant Valley's par 72 layout meant that only the 81 entries shooting 147 or better, which is three over par, qualified for the final two days of televised play.

The most notable of the nonqualifiers was U.S. Open champion Tony Jacklin, who missed the "cut" by a single stroke after tangling with a water hazard on the seventh hole. The eight he scored on that par three hole gave Jacklin a six-over 78 for the day as he led a flock of tourists to the sidelines.



RECORD EFFORT — Gary Hall gulped for air on the way to breaking his own world record for the 400-meter individual medley yesterday a the U.S. AAU Senior National Swimming Championships in Los Angeles. (UPI telephoto)

Giant's Remarkable Game

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Frank Reberger, who couldn't find his way around the first half of the season, now seems a solid fixture on the San Francisco Giants pitching staff.

"I don't think I was doing anything right earlier in the year," Reberger said Friday night after stopping the Chicago Cubs on six hits in a 5-1 victory. "I wasn't throwing right, I wasn't standing right on the mound and I didn't seem to be following through correctly."

Friday night, though, he put everything together, including a new, smoother delivery, to pitch his best game of the year and gain his fifth triumph in 10 decisions.

Reberger's fast ball, his meal ticket, exploded all over the plate and while he only struck out six batters he got most of them in key spots and gave the Giants bullpen still another day off.

"I have two fast balls," Reberger said. "One takes off and the other sinks. I go for the sinking one when I need a strikeout badly or a ground ball."

He used both types of fast balls effectively. In the fourth, when the Cubs scored their only run Reberger got out of a jam by getting Paul Popovich to ground back to him on a sinking fastball.

He used the same sinking fast ball in the fifth to strike out the dangerous Jim Hickman with the bases filled and two out and in the seventh he retired the equally dangerous Billy Williams on a fly ball—off a rising fast ball—with two on and two out.

"I guess it was my best game of the year," Reberger said, "because when I got into jams I was able to pitch my way out. If you can do that you are a good pitcher, and if you can't then you aren't."

Both catcher Dick Dietz and Manager Charlie Fox thought it was an outstanding effort.

"When you consider how bad he was earlier, this has to be a remarkable game," said Fox.

"He put it all together this time," said Dietz. "You couldn't have asked for a better effort. With his fast ball exploding all over the place he really had me on the move."

Five different Giants batted in a run with Hal Lanier's bloop single to center in the fourth driving in what proved to be the winner. A single by Willie Mays and a sacrifice fly by Dietz drove in two more runs in the fifth and a walk to Willie McCovey with the bases filled in the sixth drove in the final run.

A double by McCovey, a walk to Ken Henderson, a short single by Dietz and a groundout by Alan Gallagher netted the Giants, who now have won six of their last seven games, their first run in the second. The Cubs, who stranded 11 men, scored their only run in the fourth on a single by Williams and a double by Joe Pepitone.

Despite the loss, the Cubs remained in third place in the National League East, four games behind the front-running Pittsburgh Pirates. By winning, the Giants moved into third place in the NL West, but they are a distant 18 1-2 games behind Cincinnati.

Tip From Swimming Champ: Hall Says 'Stay Relaxed'

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—For Gary Hall, the big thing is staying relaxed. That's when he's at his best.

Hall, a 19-year-old Indiana University sophomore from Garden Grove, Calif., was nice and loose Friday night. And he went out and clipped nearly three seconds off his world record in the men's 400-meter individual medley.

"I kept calm and relaxed tonight," Hall explained. "I was too tensed up last night. You have to be keyed up for a race but it should be more from confidence than nervousness."

Beaten by Mike Stamm of San Diego, Calif., in the 200-meter backstroke Thursday night, Hall lowered his 400 individual medley record from 4:33.9 set lat year to 4:31.02.

Hall, who also holds the world record in the men's 200 individual medley, was clocked in a sizzling 59.74 seconds in his opening butterfly leg of the race.

After the bacgstroke leg, Hall's time was 2:07.45. He was 3:30.24 after the breaststroke before his final freestyle leg.

"I wanted to go out hard and I did," the blond Phillips 66-Long Beach, Calif., swimmer said. "The fly is my second best stroke and it really gave me a big lead on the record.

GOOD TURNS

"I didn't have much trouble at any time. My turns were very good."

Hall's record was the fifth world mark established in two days of competition at the Los Angeles Swim Stadium. The meet runs through Sunday night with 16 more events.

A silver medalist in the 400 individual medley at the Mexico City Olympics, Hall captured his eighth AAU outdoor title. He said he was looking forward to the Olympics at Munich in two years.

"I have a few plans for 1972," he smiled. "One thing I must do, though, is keep my mental attitude up. That's very important."

There were three other individual races Friday night with Mark Spitz, a triple world record holder from Santa Clara, Calif., getting his second crown in as many nights.

Spitz, 20, a junior at Indiana University, took the men's 200-meter freestyle in 1:54.60. That gave him eight national outdoor championships.

Holder of seven American records, Spitz explained why he failed to better the world mark of 1:54.3 he shares with Don Schollander.

IT WAS CHILLY

"I didn't get out as fast as I wanted to," the 6-foot-1, 170-pounder said. "It was a little chilly for me. I guess I should have gone after the record in the afternoon (in the qualifying) when it was warm."

A pair of 17-year-old seniors at Long Beach's Millikan High School, Susie Atwood and Ann Simmons, won the women's individual events.

Miss Atwood took the 400-meter individual medley in 5:07.32 for her second victory in two nights and fourth outdoor crown after her schoolmate won the 200 freestyle in 2:09.64.

Debbie Meyer, the triple gold medal winner at the 1968 Olympics who lowered her world record in the women's 400 freestyle Thursday night, finished third in the race won by Miss Atwood.

"I was surprised I was so far ahead of Debbie (12 yards) when I started the freestyle," Miss Atwood declared. "My legs were kind of tired in the last 50 meters. I'd have to say Ann's win inspired me tonight."

Miss Meyer, 18-year-old Sacramento, Calif., schoolgirl, was scratched from the 200 freestyle.

"I figured anyone who got in the finals could win after Debbie dropped out," Miss Simmons commented after her initial AAU outdoor win. "I was just swimming as hard as I could and praying that I would win."

Ex-49er Star Signs With L.A. Rams

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

FULLERTON, Calif — Clark Miller, a nine-year veteran of the National Football League who played with the San Francisco 49ers from 1961 through 1968, was signed as a free agent yesterday by the Los Angeles Rams. The 32-year-old Miller, a 6-5, 245 defensive end from Utah State, was picked by the Rams after receiving his release from the Washington Redskins.

Golf

DARIEN, Conn — Martha Wilkinson of Whittier, Calif., and Cynthia Hill of St. Petersburg, Fla., yesterday won semi-final matches in the 70th U.S. Women's Amateur Golf Tournament. Miss Wilkinson, 21, didn't lose a hole in defeating Shelly Hamlin of Fresno, Calif., 5 and 4, and Miss Hill, 22, rallied on the last two holes to beat June Bastanchuy of Whittier, two up.

LEAWOOD, Kan. — Shirley Englehorn and Kathy Whitworth both shot two-under-par 70s yesterday to take the first round lead in the $20,000 Southgate Invitational golf tournament.

TUALATIN, Ore. — Bob Crook, a 60-year-old bank manager from Longview, Wash., upset George Beechler, a mortician from Medford, Ore. 1up yesterday to win the Oregon Seniors golf championship at the Tualatin Country Club.

Bowling

WAUKEGAN, Ill. — Dave Soutar, a 10-year veteran from Gilroy, Calif., fire a 297 final game last night and took a commanding lead after two rounds in the $40,000 Waukegan Open Bowling Tounament. Soutar, winner of five Professional Bowlers' Association championships including last January's Las Vegas Open, averaged better than 231 pins per game as he posted a two round total of 2,780. Bobby Knipple of Long Beach, Calif., held down second place with 2,658 pins.

Football

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Andy Partin of Camden, S.C., a 17-year-old high school football player, died yesterday two days after collapsing during a workout at Maxton, N.C. Hospital officials did not comment on the death of Partin, a lineman for the Camden High School team in South Carolina. His team was in Maxton practicing for its first game.

Hockey

MONTREAL — Doctors said today it will be a few months before they can give an indication as to how far hockey player Michael Briere, who has been unconscious for the last three months following an automobile accident, will be able to recover. Officials at Notre Dame Hospital said yesterday his condition has remained stationary for the past few weeks. Briere was an outstanding rookie with the Pittsburgh Penguins last season.

Basketball

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Condors of the American Basketball Association announced yesterday they have placed guard Chico Vaughn and center Lonnie Lynn on waivers.

Is The Big Red Machine Folding? Manager Worried

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Is the Big Red Machine breaking down?

The guy who operates the machine, Sparky Anderson, thinks maybe it is, and he's getting worried.

The Big Red Machine, better known as the Cincinnati Reds, has been just a mediocre team since the All-Star break. Before that it was practically unbeatable. But with six weeks still to play in the season, things don't look as safe for the Reds as they did a few weeks ago.

The New York Mets, behind the seven-hit pitching of Jerry Koosman, beat the Reds, 4-1, Friday night and reduced the Reds' lead over the second place Los Angeles Dodgers in the National League's West Division to 10 games—but only eight in the lost column.

OWN CAUSE

The Dodgers helped their own cause—and the Mets'—by edging the Pittsburgh Pirates, 2-1, behind the seven-hit pitching of Claude Osteen. The Pirates now lead the Mets by only 1 1-2 games in the East division race.

Anderson doesn't feel the Reds are home free by a long shot, even though most critics have quietly conceded the division title to Cincinnati.

"I'm concerned," the Reds' manager said. "We can't continue playing this see-saw way we're playing now if we want to beat the Dodgers. (Walt) Alston is a great manager. He keeps his club at a top pitch, and he won't hand it to us. I'm not pleased with the way we're playing. It's not that we've had a letdown, but we just haven't played well."

The Reds, who were 62-26 at the All-Star break, have won only 20 of 38 games since. They still have five games left with the Dodgers.

Koosman held the Reds in complete check Friday night. The big lefthander, bothered by a sore arm earlier this year, didn't have his powerful fastball but he kept the Reds off stride with sharp control and an assortment of curves.

GOOD VELOCITY

"I wasn't overpowering and I didn't challenge the hitters, but I kept the ball where I wanted it. I maintained good velocity," said Koosman.

The Mets took advantage of the wildness of Reds' starter Tony Cloninger to score two big runs in the second inning. Cloninger walked Bud Harrelson and Wayne Garrett with the bases loaded to force home two runs and the Mets took charge from there. Harrelson, who entered the game tied with Chicago's Don Kessinger for most consecutive errorless games played at shortstop (54), missed a chance to set the record when he erred on the first play of the game. He later committed another error which allowed the Reds to score their only run of the game.

Osteen continued his mastery over the Pirates as he beat them for the fourth straight time this season. The stylish lefthander wasn't quite as stingy as he has been in the past, however, as he allowed them a run—the first the Pirates have scored off him in 46 innings.

OTHER GAMES

In other NL games, San Francisco beat Chicago, 5-1; St. Louis walloped San Diego, 14-8; Montreal edged Atlanta, 6-4; and Houston beat Philadelphia 9-1 in the nightcap of a doubleheader after losing the opener, 9-3.

Baltimore blanked California, 5-0, as Dave McNally became the majors first 19-game winner; Cleveland beat Oakland, 6-3; Minnesota edged Washington, 4-3; Kansas City nipped Boston, 2-1, in 12 innings; New York defeated Chicago, 4-2; and Detroit topped Milwaukee, 6-4, in American League action.

An Astounding Victory For Gretel

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI)—Valiant, which was beaten Friday by Intrepid for its first loss in the U.S. America's Cup final trials, met Heritage today in a race in which a loss might eliminate Heritage.

Australia's Fretel II, which beat France Friday in a peculiar race which opened their international qualifying series, the first ever held, and France had the day off after France requested a "lay" day. They meet again Monday in the second race of their best of seven series.

Gretel beat France by an astounding six minutes, 30 seconds after France had led at the first five marks although never by much. The wind was only eight knots when the two twelve-meters started, and died to a calm several times during the race, leaving the two yachts helplessly floundering.

FRESH BREEZE

But the breeze finally freshened to eight knots again and at the final turn skipper Jim Hardy of Gretel buffed France's 62-year-old Swiss skipper, Louis Noverraz, into thinking that Gretel would go inside. To prevent this, Noverraz turned too tight, lost the wind and stopped his boat.

"We went through him and away," said Hardy. "Then we got better wind than he did and kept going."

Hardy said that aside from that error Noverraz had outsailed him for much of the race.

The lack of wind cut Friday's Intrepid-Valiant race to three legs, when it was called off with Intrepid 23 seconds in the lead. It was declared an official race, although it was only 10.8 miles rather than the regulation 24.3.

3-1 RECORDS

Each has now won three and lost one (each beat the other) and Heritage has not beaten either. Should Heritage, built and skippered by Charles Morgan of St.Petersburg, Fla., lose again today to Valiant, skippered by Bill McCullough of Riverside, Conn., it be excused from further competition by the New York Yacht Club selection Committee. There is no specific duration of the U.S. trials—the Selection Committee simply decides when yachts are eliminated.

Bout Triumphs In Semi-Pro

BRIDGETON, N.J. (UPI)—Although giving up on his knuckleball after three innings, pitcher-author Jim Bouton won his semi-pro debut Friday night, pitching Pat Pavers of Trenton to a 7-5 victory over the Washington, D.C. Black Sox.

Bouton, who retired from professional baseball last week, was touched for 13 hits, including a homer, in the nine-inning game but was able to hold the defending tournament champions scoreless over the final three innings. He struck out 10 batters.

ALMANAC

Today is Saturday, Aug. 22, the 234th day of 1970 with 131 to follow.

The moon is between its full phase and last quarter. The morning stars are Mars and Saturn. The evening stars are Mercury, Venus and Jupiter.

On this day in history:

In 1851 the U.S. yacht, America, defeated a number of British ships off Cowes, England, to win a silver trophy. It still carries the title "The America's Cup."

In 1911 the Mona Lisa was stolen from the Louvre Museum in Paris. It was recovered Dec. 10.

In 1941 Nazi troops advanced to the outskirts of Leningrad in Russia during World War II.

In 1968 Pope Paul received a hearty welcome in Bogota, Colombia. It was the first visit to Latin America by a Roman Catholic pontiff.

A thought for the day: Bret Harte said, "One big vice in a man is apt to keep out a great many smaller ones."

Guilty Verdict In Taking $20

Two East Bay men, accused of taking a Little League fund-raising jar containing $20 from a Sausalito restaurant Wednesday night, were found guilty by Municipal Judge Peter Allen Smith.

Morris Dashutes, 40, and Peter Joseph Dsmond, 33, of Oakland, had pleaded not guilty to the misdemeanor count, and waived jury trial, restng their case on the police report.

Judge Smith set Sept. 25 for reading of probation reports and sentencing.

Bridge Errors Not Publicized But Even Experts Can Fumble

When a baseball player catches a ball in the outfield with his skull, you are sure to read about it in all the papers. When a bridge player does something equally inept, he is mortally offended at any columnist who writes a word about it. So I won't say who played today's hand, but I will mention that it was a well known American player, competing in the world championship pair contest in Stockholm a few weeks ago.

Opening lead — ♠ Q

OWED GRATITUDE

Declarer won the first trick in dummy with the ace of spades and should have bowed three times to the West in gratitude for the neutral lead. South led the deuce of diamonds to the king and returned a heart to try a finesse with the queen. East dropped the ten, and now the slam was on ice.

Declarer could continue with the ace and jack of hearts to force out the king, and could get to dummy with the queen of diamonds to take the nine of hearts and then the last two hearts. He would make five hearts, two spades, four diamonds and the ace of clubs.

REPEATS FINESSE

If South had played the hand in that way, you might be reading about it now, but the first paragraph of this story would be different. South had the slam in his grasp, but he bobbled it.

South led a diamond to the jack and led another heart to repeat the finesse, hoping that East had falsecarded with 10-x of hearts. The second finesse worked, but now South had to go ahead with the hearts and give West the king. West returned the king of clubs, and South could no longer make his slam.

OUT OF LUCK

If South led a diamond to dummy's queen, he could take the hearts but would then wind up with two club losers in the dummy and no way to get to his hand. If South took his own diamonds, he would wind up with one losing club and no way to get to dummy for the established hearts.

There's probably a moral in this story, but I'll let the reader supply it.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two spades.

You count 5 points in high cards and 3 points for the singleton, easily enough for a raise when you have four-card support for his suit.

SERVING ALL OF MARIN COUNTY

The Editor's Notebook

We, Too, Have A Stake In Survival Of Big Cities

When 1970 census figures are finally completed and formalized, they will underscore one thing we already know.

Big cities, like San Francisco, are losing population while suburbs, like Marin and Southern Sonoma counties, are growing rapidly.

To say that the central cities are "in trouble" has become trite. Everyone must have observed by now what is happening. White collar families are moving to the suburbs, leaving behind the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minority groups.

"DETERIORATION AND decay of the inner city," it is called. It is a nation-wide affliction.

The rising incidence of crime on big city streets and riotous outbursts are symptoms of the affliction. Health department and welfare department statistics as well as crime reports measure the dimensions of the problem.

As has been observed in this space previously, the inner city's problems are so immense that a city cannot finance solution by itself. Those of us in the suburbs must help. We have a stake in the survival of the city, too.

IRRITATING AS WAS Mayor Alioto's proposal for a commuter tax, it was not without basis in need. Now San Francisco proposes to collect a payroll tax, across the board. This too, will be most unpopular but again not without a basis in need.

Black leaders like Martin Luther King and Whitney Young Jr. have long since advocated pumping billions of federal funds into the fight to solve the big cities' problems. They have been forceful in calling for an end to spending for the Vietnam War so as to divert those massive funds into the fight to save our cities.

Now there is beginning to rise doubt in some quarters that the problem can be solved at all, within the cities.

In an editorial published earlier this month, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, for example, foresees that the solution may lie more in the suburbs than in the inner city,

PROVIDING MORE low rent public housing projects in big cities would simply continue the concentration of the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minorities there without any major change aside from the roofs over their heads.

The solution may have to be, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch indicates, in dispersing the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minorities to the suburbs.

In a sense, zoning laws have been a weapon of the "haves" against the "have-nots."

We see this in Marin where it certainly was not the intent of promulgators of zoning laws but has nonetheless been the result of their efforts.

To avoid "slums," zoning requires larger and larger lots, more and better subdivision improvements like wider streets and sidewalks — all of which adds to the ultimate price which the buyer must pay for a home.

It has been a long time since Marin has seen subdivision where homes are priced for the workingman's pocketbook. Increasingly, Marin working people have found it expedient to move to Southern Sonoma County where housing costs are more reasonable.

POPULATION PROJECTIONS indicate that even if cities are completely rehabilitated, they will not be able to absorb future growth. Some way must be found to open suburban areas to lower income areas.

During the 1970's we probably can expect pressures for suburban areas like Marin to reexamine zoning ordinances with a view to zoning low income housing along with medium and high income housing within our immediate area.

IT IS A GOOD bet that the federal government will use its fiscal stick and carrot to encourage the likes of Marin to provide housing for the poor, the unskilled and the ethnic minorities in an overhaul of land use plans.

This will be a hard bite to swallow for some, but if the mounting sociological problems of our cities are to be solved, we have no choice but to take our medicine.

—Jack Craemer

Pollution

Polluting our environment is a sinful act and conserving it is a moral duty, so say theologians of six major Protestant denominations in announcing that their church bodies will finance a nationwide effort to promote environmental stewardship.

These churchmen say that each generation is responsible before God to guard the earth's resources as part of our heritage to succeeding generations.

Any further comment on our part would be presumptious. We could not agree more.

Sloppy Parking

It's a small matter to be sure, but nevertheless disconcerting to find some parking hog who takes up two parking spaces because of sloppy driving.

At the Civic Center, for example, where parking spaces are at a premium, you occasionally find a vehicle straddled over the line, thus effectively blocking two spaces.

The idea is to put the car between the white lines, not over it.

Bouquets And Brickbats

A BOUQUET to San Francisco-Oakland Helicopter Airlines for reconsidering an earlier decision and deciding instead to continue service to and from Marin.

A BOUQUET to the Petaluma Chamber of Commerce for backing an anti-shoplifting campaign. Shoplifting is a significant cost of doing business these days — paid for by buyers of merchandise. If shoplifting can be appreciably reduced, consumers will benefit.

A BOUQUET to Airport Limousine Service of Sausalito for starting regular trips from Marin to San Francisco International Airport and return. We hope this service enjoys the patronage it deserves.

A BOUQUET to County Fire Chief Louis J. Bloom for ordering an unauthorized fence removed — to reopen public access to the top of Mount Tamalpais.

A BOUQUET to the Kidney Foundation of Northern California which sponsored a benefit auto show at Strawberry Town and Country Village last week. We hope the event was successful in raising enough money to provide the needed kidney machine at Marin General Hospital.

BOUQUETS to all involved in the negotiations which averted a strike of Petaluma city police.

A BOUQUET to Novato Rotary Club for staging a pancake breakfast to benefit the two tot lots recently opened in Novato.

BOUQUETS to Sharon Walsh of San Rafael for winning national and world-wide tennis honors.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Bagley's Stand —'It Figures'

So Bill Bagley considers the Wakefield anti-busing bill to be "danmable, biased" (I-J, Aug. 17). It figures.

Bagley himself introduced two years ago an unsuccessful bill to promote busing. Now he is actively working for State Superintendent of Schools candidate Wilson Riles, whose stand on busing is ambiguous to say the least — just like his stand against "tax trap" Prop. 8 until just before the June election, when he "reluctantly" endorsed it.

Is Riles to be trusted when he says he's against busing? He lied about being considered for one of the top HEW posts, according to Bob Finch. He supported Angela Davis as a teacher, according to an I-J story last April 10.

I think we can say goodbye to neighborhood schools if Bill Bagley's Wilson Riles is elected.

DDT Outburst Is Emotional

Carol Childs' DDT outburst (I-J, Aug. 17) is typical of the "Don't - Confuse - Me - With - The - Facts" emotionalism of the bumper-strip ecologists.

Sure, it was embarassing for the great rconservationist organization, the Audubon Society, to discover that bird populations had increased instead of decreased since the advent of DDT. How dare they! — in defiance of the High Priestess of Nature, Rachel Carson? But then it was a simple trick on the part of her successor, Frank Graham, to announce that the Audubon Society didn't know how to count birds after all . . .

In their zealous drive to "Ban DDT" some of our popular ecologists, on learning that data about California Golden Eagles and Red Tailed Hawks show an actual increase in shell thickness, now claim the DDT-thickened shells make it hard for baby birds to peck their way out!

Miss Child's hopes for "biological controls" are shared by many archair nature lovers, but, fortunately for the general population of the world, not by authorities in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the Food and Drug Administration, or the United Nations' FAO and WHO. We can depend on biological controls for less than three per cent of our food production and virtually none of our vector protection. Like it or not, the facts are that for 97 per cent of our food supplies and nearly 100 per cent of our vector-associated health protection, we must depend on modern agricultural chemicals.

There are more than 10,000 harmful species of insects in this world, most of which would love to get at Miss Childs and her food. Maybe she should teach them to read and supply each with a copy of Mr. Graham's book?

Many Painters Shut Span Lanes

When the Richmond-San Rafael bridge was originally constructed, I suspected that the real purpose of the bridge was to provide lifetime employment for the painters, with cars and trucks merely being tolerated to pay their salaries. Recent developments have tended to confirm this suspicion, since there is now sufficient traffic to support enough painting crews to justify closing off one full lane each way.

If the traffic continues to increase at its present rate, there will shortly be enough revenue to hire another set of painting crews so that both side lanes each way can be blocked off. Of course, all the traffic will be funneled into the center lanes and will travel at the speed of the slowest car or truck—but this is no worse than most freeways at peak times.

The problem would appear to become critical when revenues are sufficient to justify additional crews, who obviously will want to use the center lanes. All is not lost, however. The bridge people can set up lights and allow traffic to flow during lunch hours, coffee breaks, relief stops, etc. Then, too, there are nights, weekends, an increasing number of holidays, and various other unscheduled periods when the people can use the bridge. Also, as the working hours are shortened, more public time becomes available.

Thus, I visualize that the situation may be tightest in another five to ten years. After that, the time spent by the painters at work will drop off until eventually they can merely draw their paychecks and go home, leaving the bridge to the commuters — as it was in the beginning.

TRY AND STOP ME

By BENNETT CERF

HARVARD BOASTS a club that's so exclusive that two future presidents of the United States were blackballed. One member, however, grows indignant when his group is accused of being undemocratic. "To prove my point," he points out angrily, "the year I rowed on the varsity crew, I knew the names of all but the three men up front."

A NEWLY ELECTED Senator came home from his freshman year in Washington with views that were radically different than the ones proclaimed in his campaign. A friend who had previously disagreed vehemently with his opinions told him, "I'm certainly glad that a long last you appear to have been the light." "I didn't see the light," admitted the Senator, "I felt the heat."

MARQUIS CHILDS

Public Quarrel Between Israel, Washington Could Be Perilous

WASHINGTON — The perils of diplomacy by public charge and counter-charge are painfully evident in the dispute over Israel's claim that Egypt violated the cease-fire hours after it was entered into. During one of his many visits to the State Department Israeli Ambassador Yitzhak Rabin was told pointedly of one peril.

Public opinion in this country will turn against Israel in the belief that the charges repeatedly made in public are an attempt to sabotage the peace talks. The Nixon Administration, it was stressed, puts the highest importance on the Middle East peace initiative, and with the conviction that American opinion supports the effort to check the drift toward war.

If it served no other end, the warning further inflamed the bitter and angry feeling that has set most Israelis against the United States or, at any rate, against the administration in Washington. Since the United States is Israel's only real friend in the world, this is a dramatic shift with disturbing implications for the immediate future. After all, the Nixon Administration will be in power for two years more and officials in the state department and the White House wrestling with the cease-fire feel a reciprocal irritation and resentment ocer the public airing in Tel Aviv of Israel's grieveances.

Nothing like this festering hostility has occurred since the abortive war of 1956. Then another Republican administration took stern measures to compel Israeli forces to stop short of advancing on Cairo and overthrowing Gamal Abdel Nasser. They were quite capable of doing just that even though British-French support by sea and air had fallen short of the pledged backing.

Although at the climactic moment of that Middle East crisis Secretary of State John Foster Dulles had undergone his first cancer operation, it was his policy that prevailed. The Ambassador to the United Nations, Henry Cabot Lodge, repeatedly called not only for a halt but a withdrawal. With the Soviet Union taking the same position, there was the unique spectacle of the two super powers standing together in the world forum.

The bitterness growing out of that confrontation, with Israel accepting the U.S. dictum and the British and the French humiliated, persisted for a long time. It was only with the advent of a Democratic administration in 1961 and Lyndon Johnson's later approval of the sale of advanced weapons, notably the supersonic Phantom fighter-bomber plane, that the close relationship of the past was revived. That relationship dated from an earlier Democratic President, Harry S. Truman, who took instant action to recognize the infant state of Israel when it came into being.

Something new has been added since 1956, putting the present strain between Washington and Tel Aviv in a new light. The Soviet Union has established a major military presence in the Mediterranean.

An extensive fleet is served by bases in Egypt and elsewhere in the area. This has been a steady buildup posed against the American Sixth Fleet that was once not only the largest but virtually the only important force in the Mediterranean. The introduction of Soviet technicians and pilots to help man Egyptian defenses was one more step to try to insure the Nasser regime from collapse and to prevent bombing in Egypt's interior zone.

The story is told of one of the far-out Israeli hawks who challenged an American military visitor to Tel Aviv to say why the Soviets had been permitted to establish this power base. And why, he went on, don't you just order them out? If they refuse, you know what you can do. To the visitor this seemed a slightly hazardous proposal, suggesting that nuclear war would be merely one incidental result of forcing the Soviets out of the Mediterranean.

But it does raise a question for which there is really no answer. Could anything have been done to prevent this impressive buildup?

ART BUCHWALD

It's The Taxis That Point To Dream World Of Television Land

I was talking the other day with a friend and we got around to the question of what was wrong with television. We both came to the conclusion that everyone on TV was being presented in a false light, and the public was being cheated out of seeing situation as they really are. For example, on the lawyer shows "Perry Mason" and "The Defenders," no one ever asks for a fee. There is never any discussion of money on these programs and people are under the impression that any lawyer will defend you for the love of it.

But in real life this is what would happen: A woman comes into Perry Mason's office. She says, "My son has been accused of a crime, but I know he didn't do it."

PERRY IN REAL life would say, "Wait a minute, madam. Befor you go any further, I'll have to ask for a retainer."

"He's innocent," the lady says. "You've got to defend him."

"How much can you afford? Legal costs are expensive. If he pleads guilty, I'll make a deal with the district attorney and save you the expense of a long, drawn-out jury trial."

"But he wants to plead not guilty."

"Big deal," says Perry. "They'll probably hang him anyway and it will still cost you $5,000."

"I GUESS YOU'RE right," the woman says. "Plead him guilty. He's always getting into trouble, anyway."

"That will be $500 now and $500 at the start of the trial. If there are any other expenses, I'll let you know."

Or let's take "Dr. Kildare." What kind of guy would Dr. Kildare be if he weren't on television? Perhaps something like this:

"Dr. Kildare," an elderly man says, "I have a pain in my side."

"I don't know anything about pains in people's sides. I'll send you to a specialist, Dr. Renfrow."

"But besides my side, my left leg hurts."

"Why didn't you say so in the first place? Dr. Lavine is the best leg man in town. Tell him I sent you."

"And it hurts when I breathe."

"YOU NEED A good lung man. After you see Dr. Lavine about your leg, go over and see Dr. Ordman about your chest. I'll write down the address here."

"I can't read your handwriting," the old man says.

"Eye trouble, too? You better see Dr. Feldman, the eye, ear, nose and throat man."

"Thank you very much, Dr. Kildare."

"Don't mention it. That will be $10."

What about Dr. Ben Casey, if there were such a person in real life?

A NURSE RUSHES in. "Dr. Casey, there's been a terrible skiing accident. They want you in the operation room right away."

Casey puts on a mask, sterilizes his arms, walks over to the table.

"Has this man signed a release that I'm not responsible if the operation doesn't come off?"

"No, sir. He was brought in unconscious."

"Well, I'm not operating until someone signs a release. Do you think I'm going to be sued for malpractice?"

The final thing to make one suspect television of not being true-to-life is that taxis are always plentiful on TV and ready to pursue the heavy.

Mysterious Albania's Cocoon Cracking

By RICHARD M. SUDHALTER

BELGRADE (UPI)—The cocoon of isolation surrounding Albania, the least-understood nation in Europe, at last appears to be breaking. The abiding political question now for both East and West is why.

Tirana, the capital of the lone European ally of Communist China, has put out a series of dilpomatic feelers in recent months clearly aimed at thawing relations on a wide variety of fronts.

It has exchanged ambassadors with Scandinavian countries and made open overtures to "revisionist" Yugoslavia next door. It has negotiated cultural and technical exchanges with Egypt and Turkey and increased trade with Romania.

Most surprising of all was Albania's signing in June of a trade agreement with Greece, with which it is still technically at war. A Greek foreign ministry spokesman went as far this month as to say he thought the accord ultimately could lead to "the start of eventual diplomatic relations."

Relations or no, the trade pact is an unprecedented Albanian gesture toward Greece, a key Atlantic Alliance member whose leaders are regularly decried throughout the Communist world as "a fascist military clique." It is also a landmark on what appears to be Albania's path to a new concept of its role in the international political picture.

Albania, a mountainous land of only two million inhabitants, is about the size of Vermont and Rhode Island combined. It borders the Adriatic across from the heel of the Italian boot, between Yugoslavia and Greece.

Its borders remain closed to all but a steady trickle of foreign visitors who are closely supervised during their stays. Albania participates in no regular diplomatic or political activity in Europe.

Once a Warsaw Pact member, it began a drift out of the Soviet orbit in the 1950s which culminated in a break with the alliance in 1968.

Since then Tirana has strengthened its political and military ties with China, though periodic reports of Chinese missiles and other weapons systems in Albania have never been verified.

East European diplomats in Belgrade said recent Albanian moves appear to indicate realization in Tirana that close ties with Peking —even ideological ones—do not imply identical political needs or even attitudes.

"It would be wrong to assume that Albania and China have completely similar views concerning world problems," the Zagreb newspaper Vjesnik commented April 25. "On the contrary, there have existed important differences (between them) and individual points of view on certain international issues. Internal developments in Albania, moreover, are certainly no imitation of Chinese socialism."

Accordingly, Albania has developed a highly individual approach to its relations with neighboring Greece and Yugoslavia, as well as with Bulgaria and Romania.

Communist Party leader Enver Hoxha followed up a series of friendly newspaper articles by praising "good neighborly relations" with Yugoslavia in a May 30 speech in Bajram Curry, near the Yugoslav border.

His remarks followed only a week after a decision by the Yugoslav party presidium to step up development of Kosovo, the largely Albanian-populated south Yugoslav province bordering Albania. He took note—another unprecedented move—of the fact Albanians in Kosovo are being granted more and more rights by the Belgrade government.

Diplomats warned, however, that the influence of Chinese policy on Albanian thinking, while far from absolute, cannot be underplayed. They recalled Peking took the lead in thawing out its international diplomatic relations, sending back to their posts many ambassadors pulled home during China's "cultural revolution" of the 1960s.

Yugoslavia's first ambassador to Peking in 12 years arrived in the Chinese capital in May. Peking's envoy is expected in Belgrade within the next few weeks.

Albanian-Yugoslav relations remain at legation-level.

The reason or reasons for the Chinese and Albanian thaws remain subjects for discussion, at least for the moment. But most diplomats here advise close study of the Sino-Soviet dispute for possible clues.

"Both the Chinese and the Albanians fear the Soviet Union," one senior Western diplomat said recently. "For them, good relations these days could mean more sympathy for their side of things—and possibly more support."

The Kremlin periodically reaffirms its declared readiness to restore good relations with its ex-Warsaw pact ally on the south Adriatic despite what it terms "intrigues by hostile forces"—presumably the Chinese.

But for Moscow radio, the Graeco-Albanian trade pact in June "meets the wishes of official circles in the USA for paving the path for American penetration into Albania through their links with the Greek Fascist junta."

From all indications, Albania's diplomatic "new look" has already begun to yield results. Yugoslav president Tito, apparently taking Hoxha's cue, told a recent rally in Zabljak, south Yugoslavia, "We have no other interests than good relations as far as Albania is concerned. It has always been our wish to make our relations as good as possible. True, our systems are different—but this should not be a reason for poor relations on the frontiers."

Observers agreed the 78-year-old president's speech was Yugoslavia's warmest nod yet in Albania's direction.

"It's up to Tirana now," the Western diplomat said. "And I've got a hunch the Albanians will accept the invitation."

OPENING UP? — Albania, a mountainous land of only two million inhabitants, which borders on the Adriatic, has been sending out diplomatic and trade feelers to other nations. Albania has been strengthening its political and military ties with Communist China since breaking with the Warsaw pact alliance in 1968. (UPI Telephoto map)

NIXON AND YOUTH

Team Maps Key Conference Items

By SUSAN McCABE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House Conference on Youth which will meet here next February may be the Nixon administration's "last chance" to establish some kind or rapport with young people who are disenchanted with their government and its policies, a White House intern said today.

John Runyan, 21, of Akron, Ohio, a Harvard senior who spent the summer working in Washington, said in an interview that he foresees "great trouble ahead" unless some bridges of mutual understanding are quickly constructed between government and youth.

Helping to prepare for the forthcoming youth conference was Runyan's primary assignment as a White House intern. He was part of a team collecting information on the ideas and opinions of young people, interviewing college students, soldiers, job holders and others in an attempt to get an overall picture of the views of the 14 to 24 age group.

He said the February conference will deal with 10 topics, chosen by young people as issues of prime concern to them.

They are: selective service; drugs; education; environmental pollution; minority relations; poverty; legal rights and justice; foreign relations; economy and employment; and values, ethics and culture.

Each subjevt will be examined by a 12-member team including four adults and eight young people of varying background and education. The task forces will suggest possible courses of action in each area.

The youth conference was originally scheduled for next June but the administration has moved it up to late February, indicating President Nixon's recognition of the pressing necessity of opening a dialogue with young people.

Runyan said he's encouraged by the fact that "the administration has promised to respond to the recommendations of the Conference."

"If the Conference can demonstrate it will be different, the kids might buy it," he said, adding that by "different" he meant the government would really "listen and respond to the Conferences' recommendations."

Runyan said the present attitude of most college students towards the administration tends to be suspicious, and this distrust can be overcome only by action, not promises.

"They're not going to believe it until it happens," he said.

Runyan said that despite their urgent desire for change, 80 to 90 per cent of the college students are opposed to any attempt to achieve it through violence.

"Most students think the kids who want to burn down buildings and start riots are crazy," he said.

"The great majority of students don't want to fight; they just want to be listened to."

Runyan said he hopes that the White House Conference, by airing the views of youth, also will awaken the "silent majority" to a greater concern for national problems. "If one segment of the population expresses an active concern, the great silent portions of the country may decide to become vocal too."

Asserting youth's right to be heard on national problems, he noted that in "Walden," Henry David Thoreau said "Age is not better, hardly so well qualified for an instructor as youth, for it has not profited so much as it has lost."

Applying Thoreau's precept to today's society, Runyan argued that the older generation has not profited so much materially as it has lost idealistically.

With age often comes disillusionment and apathy, he said, and people accept a difficult "reality." They adopt a "no, this is not the best of worlds but there's nothing I can do to change it" attitude.

By contrast, he said, young people today are refusing to accept their parents' "reality." Their philosophy is, "if this is not the best world possible, then let's change it."

Haight-Ashbury Business Is Bad—Even For Pushers

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Outside a shuttered coffee shop in the Haight-Ashbury District, a sign reads: "Brother Juniper's Inn is now closed. May the love, light and life descend upon you from the great Christos."

That sums up the situation in the disaster area that three years ago was the scene of the Flower Children's Summer of Love.

Where hundreds of thousands of American youth came to seek peace, love and the hippie life style, every third shop is boarded up and empty. A penciled note behind the grate of one psychedelic store simply states: "Closed forever."

Now that a driver can park any place, the Police Department has restored two-way traffic to Haight Street, once jammed bumper-to-bumper.

The only hip-oriented shop surviving from three-dozen in 1967 is the Phoenix, named for the bird that rose alive from the ashes.

Its owner, Bob Stubbs, says the district still contains many hippies because of low rents but they don't walk Haight Street much anymore. It can be dangerous.

Knots of hard-eyed drug pushers and motorcycle toughs stand on the corners waiting for action. Stubbs says "police hassling" also continues.

His own store occasionally is "ripped off" by thieves who grab an armload of merchandise and run. That's a main reason, along with the disappearance of tourists, for the exodus of hippie businessmen.

"The hippie invasion murdered us old-timers," said Mendel Herscowitz, a paint store operator and president of the Haight Street Merchants Association. Customers of established businesses stopped coming, Herscowitz said, adding, "I stayed alive because I'm flexible."

He explained business is so bad even the drug pushers "are dying on their feet, too. The white suburban kids don't have to come here to buy dope. They get it in their schools."

"Violent crime still is very high, but it is dropping because the bad boys are losing their victims," police lieutenant George Sully said.

The Haight-Ashbury Medical Clinic is mostly concerned these days with heroin addicts, a switch from youths on bad LSD trips in 1967-68 and the earlier methedrine "speed freaks."

As more youths use heroin as "a downer" for calming methedrine experiences, Dr. George Gay at the clinic said, heroin clinic sees 50 addicts each afternoon.

In a sense, the addicts dropouts from the Hippie culture in whose communes, now located in other parts of San Francisco and in rural areas, hard drugs usually are strictly forbidden.

Some of the hippie institutions of 1967 remain and quietly flourish, such as Switchboard, a communications center. The Food Conspiracy commune buys food wholesale and sells it at cost to 20 other communes. The Kauliflower commune publishes a newspaper for commune members and the Good Earth publishes a newspaper for the general public.

But for hippies he Haight-Ashbury District is dead, a fate perhaps the hippies themselves foresaw not too long after the Human Be-in in Golden Gate Park Jan. 14, 1967, in which a crowd of 15,000 signaled the scope of the new phenomenon.

In October, after the 1967 Summer of Love, they staged a funeral march with a 20-foot coffin on Haight Street, proclaiming "the death of the hippie."

They meant death of the mass media's name, hippie, which they loathed. They also meant something was going wrong in the district.

And it his.

DYING OUT — The weighty events of the world, or something, are discussed by this trio passing the time of day in the Haight-Ashbury district of San Francisco. Three years ago this was the scene of the Flower Children's Summer of Love. Today every third shop is boarded up. (UPI Telephoto)

Behind The News

Independent-Journal, 29 Saturday, August 22, 1970

By United Press International

The rolling Atlantic, graveyard for stripe-sailed Viking warships,the Titanic and torpedoed warships and merchant vessels, became the catchbasin for two rusting hulks scuttled to deposit their cargoes of nerve gas and explosives with the relics of ancient and modern mariners.

The result of both operations hung with the weight of an albatross around the neck of the Navy.

The Lebaron Russell Briggs carrying 67 tons of obsolete but toxic nerve gas sealed in 418 concrete and steel vaults, was intended to slip slowly under the waves 282 miles east of the Florida coast and to descend quietly through 16,000 feet of water where it later could be traced to determine gas leakage.

Instead, the Navy virtually lost track of the old ship Tuesday as it plummeted to the bottom in eight minutes and hit the seabed at 25 miles an hour, destroying the sound equipment needed for future surviellance.

The unexpected violent descent also caused the failure of experiments designed to determine if any gas had burst from the scuttled hulk. Of 10 bottles which should have bobbed to the surface with their water samples, four popped up prematurely and the others never made it.

Navy experts expressed disappointment but said it did not matter whether the experiments failed because the threat to human life was nonexistent

There also were complications in a second scuttling.

Aboard the aged liberty ship David Hughes, some of the 5,000 tons of explosives packed into its hulk detonated Thursday after it hit bottom in 7,200 feet of water 118 miles due east of Cape May, N.J.

Around The World, Around The Clock:

JERUSALEM—Israel, accepting the partial compliance by the United States with its charges Egypt set up missile bases within 30 miles of the Suez Canal shortly after the Mideast ceasefire, agreed to open American-inspired peace negotiations with Egypt and Jordan.

PUERTO VALLARTA, Mexico—President Nixon returned with his wife for 28 hours to the country where they had spent their honeymoon.

OMAHA, Neb.—An Omaha policeman was killed and seven other persons were injured after a bomb in a suitcase exploded in a vacant house near the predominantly Negro north side.

WASHINGTON—The Senate, on a 77-16 vote, easily overrode President Nixon's veto of the $4.4 billion education bill.

U.S. Taxpayers Tired Of Schools' Costs

By JOAN HANAUER
U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The cost of public education in the United States is going up and the willingness of the taxpayer to foot the bill is going down.

The result is an increasing number of school districts strapped for funds, on austerity budgets or — in some cases — actually shutting school doors on their pupils.

The areas hardest hit are not the big city ghetto schools but those in suburban and rural areas where the taxpayers vote on school budgets and construction bonds. Increasingly they are voting no.

A nationwide survey by UPI to discover how the public schools stand on the eve of the new term in September, came up with these examples:

In Michigan, there districts have asked the state Board of Education to allow them to hold less than full-day classes because of financial troubles stemming from voter refusal to approve tax proposals that would pay operating costs. They include Lansing, fourth largest city in the state; Lincoln Park.

In Ohio, one school district will be unable to open until late fall because voters failed to approve sufficient operating levies.

In Missouri, voters in suburban Kirkwood in St. Louis County have stubbornly turned down a descending scale of tax hikes five times this year and will vote Sept. 1 on retaining the present tax scale. Schools Superintendent W. S. Shannon called operating on the old tax rate "a situation we can live with, but not one which will contribute to continued improvement of our schools."

In St. Charles, Mo., the voters have consistently defeated a tax increase and the school board recently announced it would keep submitting the tax proposal every three weeks until it passed.

While some of the school districts with money troubles are areas with a low tax base, many are middle class to rich. A prime example is Scarsdale, a downright well-to-do New York suburb in Westchester County.

Scarsdale defeated a school budget for the first time in its history this year. Virtually the same budget was defeated on a second vote. The voters were given a third opportunity to vote on the budget — this time with the warning that the alternative was an austerity budget on which, according to state law, they would not be able to vote. They gave in and accepted the proposed budget, and tax hike.

The problem involves both rising school operating and construction costs, and the sources of the funds to pay them.

The National Education Association (NEA) reports that for the 1969-1970 school year operating costs for regular public elementary and secondary schools amounted to about $32 billon, with capital expenditures adding another $4.7 billion to the bill.

For the school year 1970-71, the U.S. Office of Education estimates current expenses and interest will total about $37 billion and capital outlay $5.5 billion.

Of this, according to the NEA, the federal government pays 6.6 per cent, the states pay 41 per cent and localities raise about 53 per cent. The figures cited are the national average — avtually localities in some states pay a larger percentage while in others the state picks up most or all of the tab.

The methods localities use to raise money vary from state to state, and sometimes from community to community. Speaking generally large cities such as New York include education in the city budget and the voters have no opportunity to vote on specific outlays.

It is in suburban and rural areas, in states that do not foot the education bill, where funds for operating expenses are raised through property taxes, or sometimes sales taxes, and for capital outlays through voter-approved bond issues.

And that is where the taxpayer revolt is taking place.

The taxpayers are not just rebelling against increases in operating costs.

Education officials all over the country agree that something must be done to change the economic base of public school systems. School finance expert A. Terry Weathers, a vice president of the New York State School Boards Association, called the present system "inequitable," and urged a change from the "restrictive property tax base" to "a broader state tax base with assistance from the federal government."

James Williams, a researcher for the Illinois Education Association, said: "A much greater part of the money must come from the state and national levels if we are going to have a quality education in Illinois."

In state after state, the results of the UPI survey tend to prove his point.

In Illinois school districts have been plagued by defeat of school referenda proposing bond issues and increases in property taxes. The effect has been reduction in educational servcies, double shifts for students until more buildings can be built, and liberal borrowing in anticipation of property tax collections. Two districts currently are in critical need of operating funds.

In Georgia an education spokesman said some schools districts would be "in trouble" this fall because of financial problems and added: "I don't know how many...I don't believe anyone knows." He said he did not anticipate any schools closing for lack of money.

DeKalb Country, with Georgia's second largest school system, had planned for $3 million to be raised via local taxes in a $49 million budget. The proposal was defeated and C. L. Harper, associate schools superintendent for the Atlanta suburb, said: "This year we are operating on an interim or deficit financing budget. If the Legislature doesn't make any other sources of revenue available, we will end this year with a $3 million deficit."

New York state is no exception to the problem. The Education Department reported on July 21 that 82 of the 677 districts voting budgets in May, June and July had rejected them. Since then 31 of the 82 have approved budgets. The State Education Law prohibits closing of schools because of budget defeats. Instead the local school board cam impose a contingency or austerity budget, on which no vote is needed.

And this is what has been happening in a number of Nassau and Suffolk County schools over the past few years. The two counties on Long Island just beyond New York City are in the lead of the taxpayers revolt.

Last year 47 school budgets went down to defeat in the two counties and the figure thus far this year is 39.

School expert Weathers, of Farmingdale, Long Island, explained why, in his view, the turndowns were taking place:

"People are feeling the frustration of other tax increases and the prospect of making ends meet in the face of ever-rising inflation. So they take out their frustrations by rejecting any more school taxes. The school tax is the one tax increase on which voters can cas a yes or no ballot."

Pennsylvania law provides for a state takeover of "distressed" school districts, and four are now in that category. A number of others might be eligible for similar state help but prefer to avoid ceding local authority to state-appointed school boards by not requesting such status.

DEADLINE IS FRIDAY FOR FILING PAPERS

Candidates for the governing boards of six public bodies on Marin County's November general election ballot have only until Friday to file their nominations.

The deadline originally was Sept. 10, but Gov. Ronald Reagan has signed urgency legislation advancing the deadline by two weeks, county elections officer Peter Meyer reported.

Vacancies are to be filled on the governing boards of the Marin Hospital District, Strawberry Recreation District, Terra Linda Park and Recreation District, Tamalpais Union High School District and Fairfax and Ross school districts.

Also changed was the deadline to submit arguments for and against ballots on the county and local district ballots. It was advanced from Sept. 10 to Sept. 4.

Schoonmaker Request Is Under Study

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The A.G. Schoonmaker Co., Inc., of Sausalito, wants to prevent the Army from opening second bids on a generator contract it asserts it won.

Federal Judge Joseph C. Waddy Friday took the firm's request for a permanent injunction against the Army under advisement. There was expected to be no ruling for at least a week on Schoonmaker's assertion that the Army allowed competitors "to obtain two bites at the bidding apple" for the generator contract.

Waddy has already issued a preliminary injunction and by Friday he had heard nearly two days of arguments in the case stemming from the opening of bids Feb. 27 for the Army contract for motor-driven generators.

Schoonmaker's original bid of $31.7 million was the lowest of three, but the Sausalito firm asserts that the Army gave the Boague Electric Co., Paterson, N.J., private information requested by the firm. Schoonmaker asserted that the same information was not provided to either Schoonmaker or the third bidder, Libby Welding, Inc.

Hiring Discussion

A proposal for hiring a consultant to review the proposed master drainage plan will be discussed when the Bel Aire Flood Control Zone advisory board meets at 8 p.m. Wednesday at Bel Aire School.

ANGELA SPELLS
Maid of Marin

Marinite Is Third In Beauty Race

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — Angela Spells, a 17-year-old Novatoan who earlier this year won the title of Maid of Marin, was named second runnerup last night in the Maid of California judging.

The beauty title went to Kathleen Hammond, a 21-year-old secretary from Whittier who recently won the Miss Los Angeles County contest.

As the Maid of California, Miss Hammond will reign over the State Fair, which runs until Sept. 9.

Second place went to Jill Shelton, 22, who is Miss Orange County.

Miss Spells, the daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Curnel Spells of 377 Alameda del Prado, won the Maid of Marin title in June and, along with Suzanne Lowe of Healdsburg, reigned over the Sonoma-Marin Fair.

Bruce Says Nothing New In Shoot-Out

Dist. Atty. Bruce Bales said yesterday his office still had not received ballistics reports from state experts in Sacramento in the investigation of the kidnap-murder of Superior Judge Harold F. Haley on Aug. 7.

Bales added there was nothing else new that he could release on the case, in which Judge Haley and two convicts and an accomplice died in an attempted escape from the Marin County Hall of Justice.

Just over a week after he obtained murder and kidnap warrants against convict Ruchell Magee, 31, recovering in San Quentin Prison hospital from wounds suffered in the shootout, and against Angela Y. Davis, Bales had no further clues on the whereabouts of Miss Davis.

The FBI has Miss Davis on its 10 most wanted list, but said yesterday her trail is regarded as cold, with no sure knowledge of where she was beyond the day of the bloody fray.

Marin, state and federal authorities have denied rumors that she was at the Hall of Justice the day of the shooting.

Armageddon To Play For Teen-Age Dance

Armageddon, a Marin-based rock music group, will entertain at a dance today from 8:30 to 11:45 p.m. at the Hamilton Air Force Base teen center.

The group will return to the base Friday for a similar event from 8 to 10 p.m.

Soldiers Freed In Weed Case

Three soldiers stationed at the Army Nike missile base on Smith Ranch Road, Santa Venetia, were freed in Marin Municipal Court yesterday after the district attorney's office said no complaint had been filed pending further investigation of marijuana possession charges.

The three were released from county jail, where they had been held in lieu of $2,250 bail each after being arrested by sheriff's deputies who saw the soldiers' car parked near the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium about 10 p.m. Thursday.

Freed were Stephen James Lisak, 23; John Patrick Hickler, 21, and Tae Kim Sture, 21.

Rancher Reports Cattle Rustling

Rustling is not a figment of the past, rancher Earl J. Dolcini has ruefully informed the sheriff's office. He told deputies that last Sunday he found a 2-year-old heifer shot to death and its hindquarters cut off and carried away from his ranch on the Marshall-Petaluma Road. Dolcini valued the cow at $250.

Deputies reported recovering a rifle shell casing and other evidence.

Peace Group Sets Session

The Marin Peace Coalition has scheduled a convocation on war issues Sept. 25 and 26 at Olney Hall, College of Marin, consisting of lectures and workshops.

The lecture sessions will cover "The History of Southeast Asia," with Quin Wilson, history instructor, College of Marin; "The Economics of American Foreign Policy," and "Creative Alternatives."

The lineup for workshops is draft counseling, Carol Shattuck, Womens International League for Peace and Freedom; peace candidates, attorney Thomas T. Storer, use of media, Bryan Gaddy, Marin Peace Coalition, and legislation, Dennis Allen, American Friends Service Committee on Legislation.

The Sept. 2 session will be from 8 to 10 p.m. and the Sept. 26 program from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

The largest railway in North America is the Canadian National Railway, which operates about 35,000 miles of track.

Another Hearing For Novato Woman

Grace Patricia Halloran, 24, is to return to Marin Municipal Court Monday for further hearing of psychiatric reports to determine whether she should be released on her own recognizance.

Miss Halloran is charged with arson in her home at 10 Gustafson Court, Novato, on Tuesday. She had been held without bail on the district attorney's contention that she was a danger to herself and the community. Judge Peter Allen Smith had ordered a mental examination and Judge Hadden W. Roth yesterday set bail at $10,000.

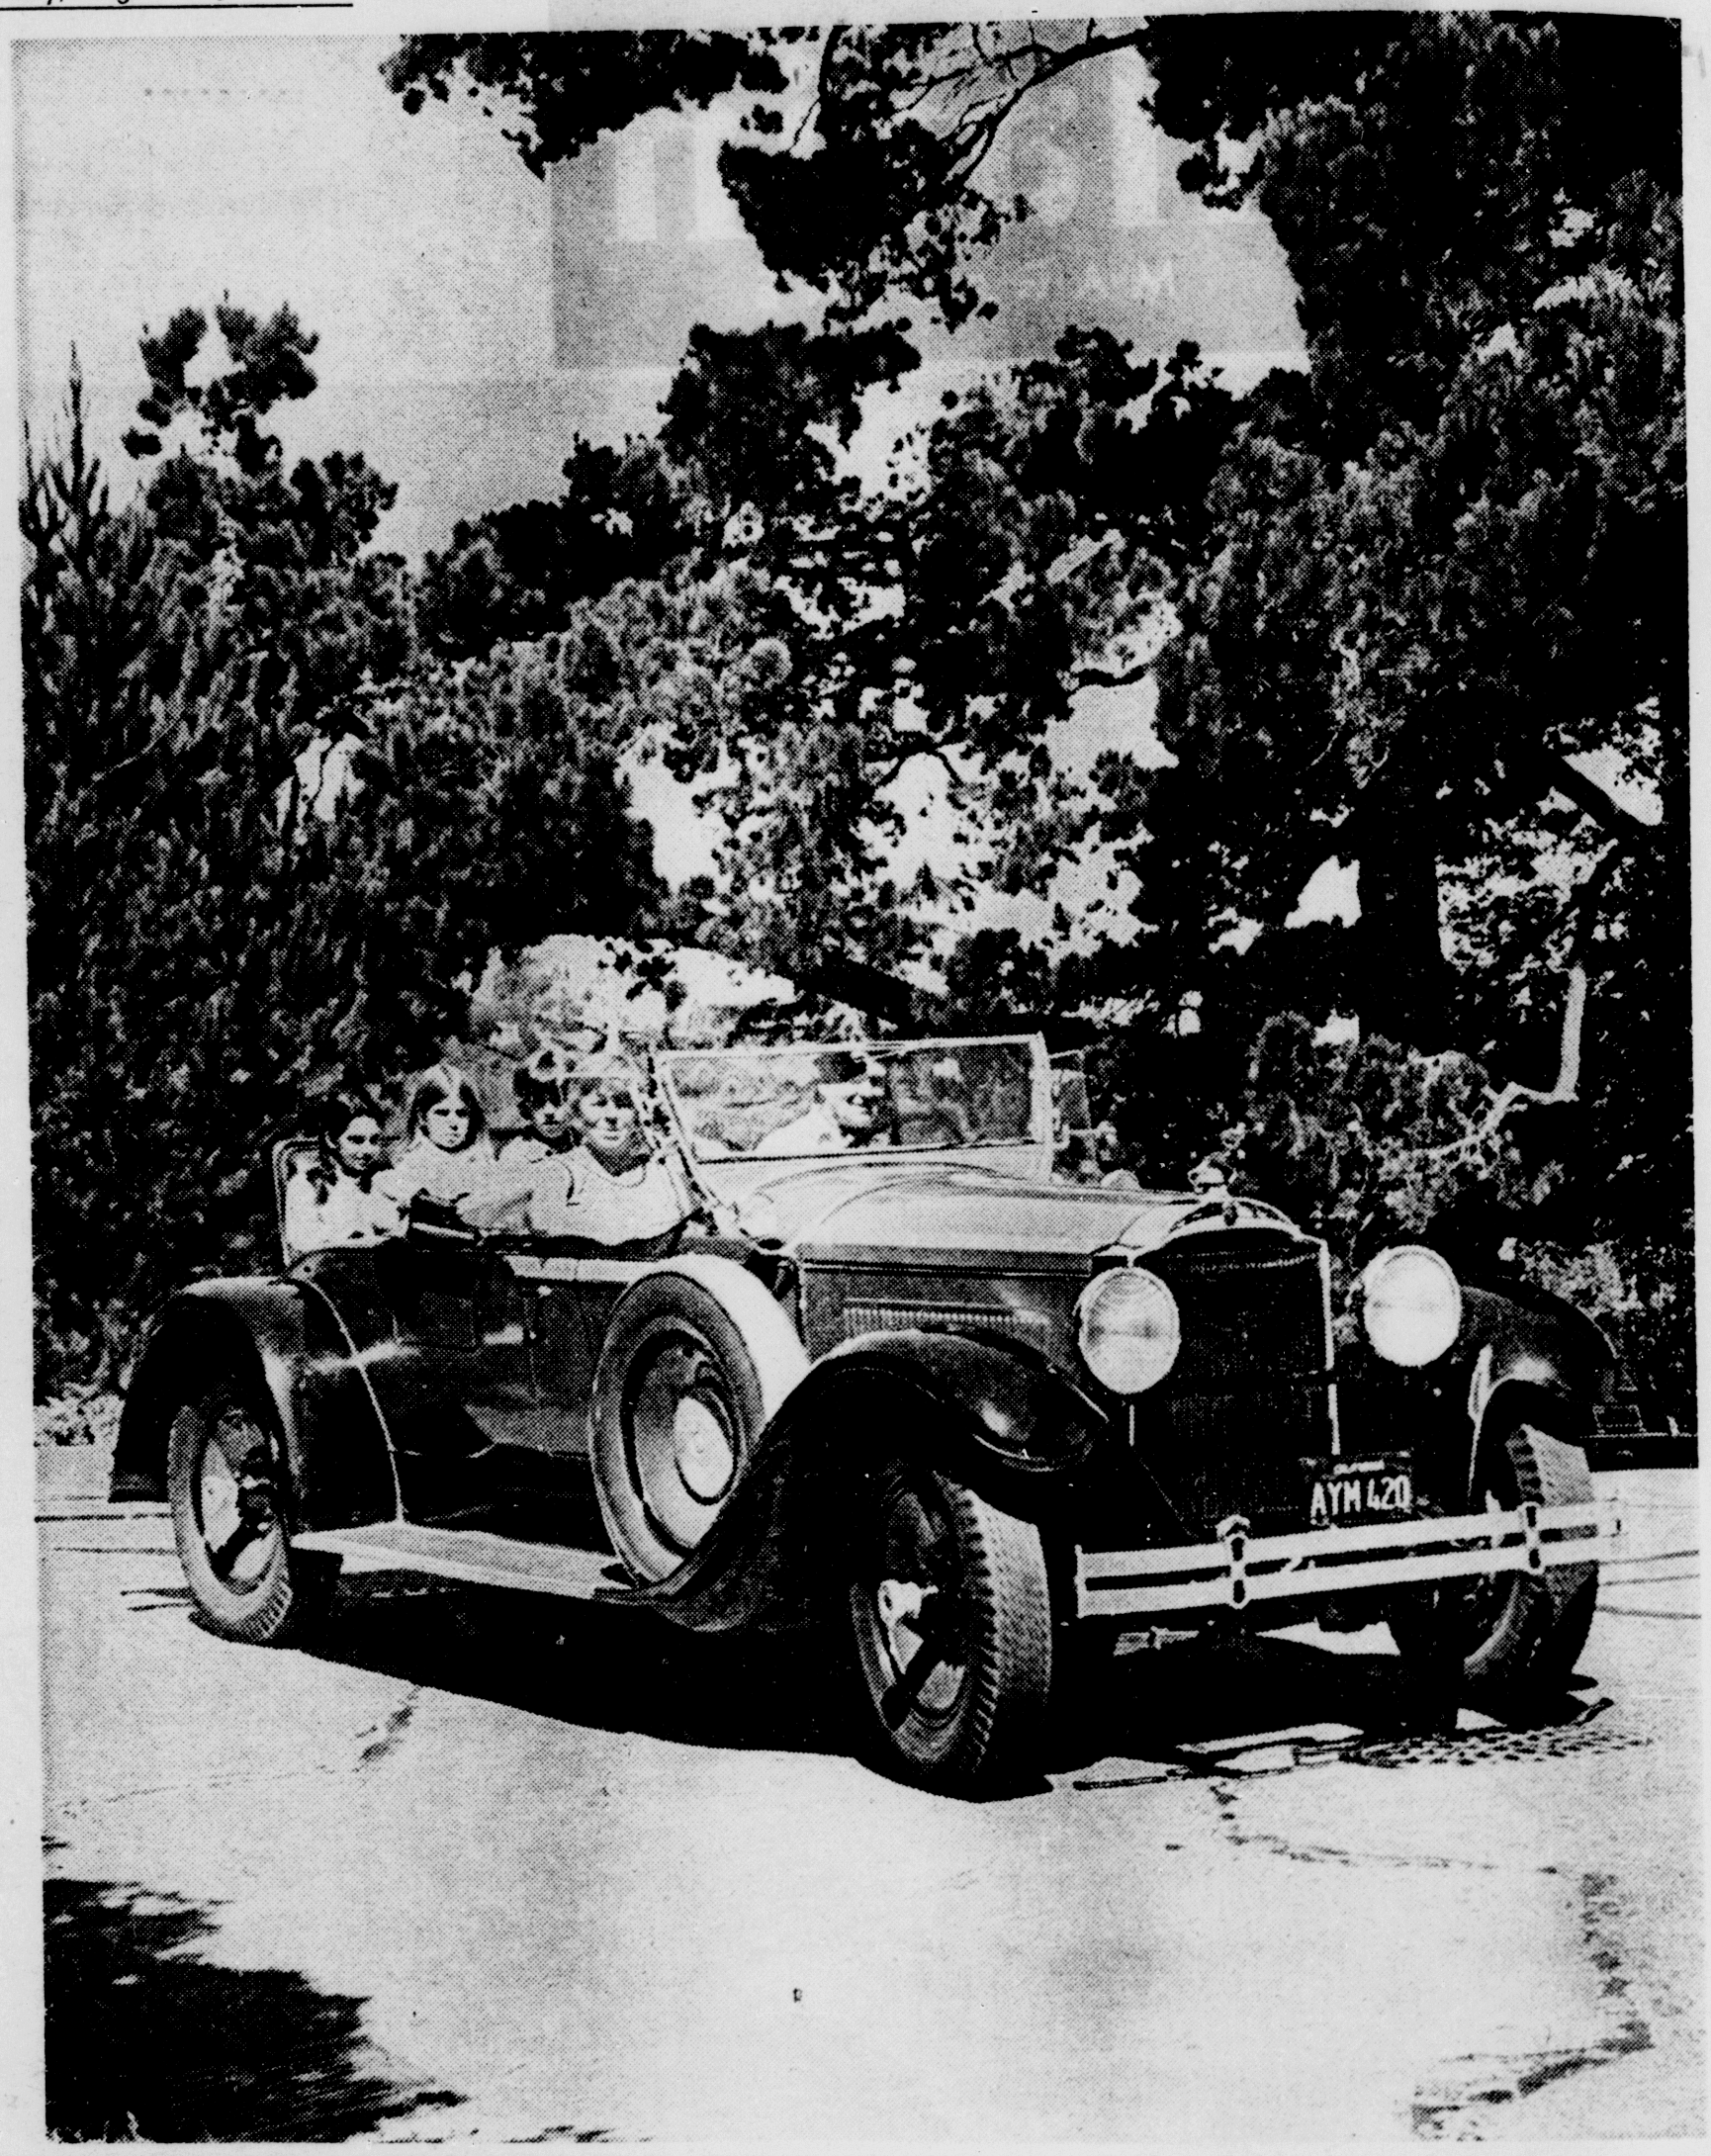
See Page M2



THE 1929 Packard Runabout, Model 6-33, that John Sweeny of Sausalito acquired 14 years ago will be on display at tomorrow's Fifth Annual Town & Country Village Auto Show at the Strawberry shopping center, as it has at many such concours. But their "Little Old Lady," as the Sweenys affectionately refer to their classic car, is far more than just a show or special interest automobile. It is used often for practical family and neighborhood transportation. And for such special purposes as politicking and parades. She's appeared in newspaper advertisements, as well. Here enjoying a spin in their "LOL" are the Sweenys, John and wife Robin in the front seat, daughters Sarah, center, and Tara with chum Anna Maria Comstock, left, in the rumble seat. As probably the only car of its kind in Marin County, the Packard is an eye-catcher as it tools around Marin's highways and streets.

The Sweenys And Their 'Little Old Lady'

"Daddy keeps threatening to turn the car in for a sailboat, but he never will."

Tara glances knowingly at her dad: "I'm right, aren't I?"

John Sweeny looks out at the fleet of boats getting under way from the Sausalito Yacht Harbor, rubs his chin thoughtfully and admits, "I say it all the time, though I probably never will. But it's like having a Little Old Lady to take care of. There's always some ailment popping up.

"IT JUST OCCURRED to me that she's 42 years old; that's half my father's age. They're both in about the same shape."

The "LOL" is better known among car buffs as a Standard 8 Model 6-33 Runabout Packard — 1929. Considered a classic in the 1925-1948 Lincoln Continental class, it is thought to be the only one of its kind in Marin.

"Ken Larkins in Kentfield owns a 1931 Packard and across the Bay there is a 1923 model very close to ours," says Sweeny.

Sweeny found his car in a garage 14 years ago. The owner had died in an Oakland boarding house and the landlady kept the car for possible next to kin. No one ever claimed it. Finally, a decade later a mechanic bought it for his own use.

"A FRIEND OF mine told me about the Packard so we went to Oakland to see it. My wife Robin was impressed. It was the dark shiny blue paint that did it. The entire car, including the dash, wheels, everything but the chrome, had been painted blue. The chrome had been sprayed silver; so had the engine in spite of a layer of oil. The top was so loaded with white paint that it cracked and fell apart when we folded it.

"It took six months to strip the paint down to the bare metal. Now it is the color she should be: Copenhagen blue with black fenders. And she's won three prizes.

"We paid $300 for it; today it's worth $4,000. That's not out of line. I've seen some similar models selling for $40,000. Those are show cars — the kind that millionaires buy and spend $10,000 having some one restore.

"I'VE PUT IN about 1,500 hours on her and approximately $1,500, but I wasn't looking for an investment. The real attraction for me was that the car was so much like the 1931 Packard Dual-Phaeton that my dad had.

"Ours is a family, fun, working car. We follow the concours circuit and show it even though it's considered an interest car, not a true show car."

To benefit the Northern California Kidney Foundation, Sweeny's Packard will be on display tomorrow along with more than 140 entries in the fifth annual Town & Country Village Auto Show in the front parking lot of the Strawberry shopping center from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

SPONSORING THE event are the Antique Automobile Club of America, Golden Gate Region, and the Porsche Club of America, Redwood Region. James Webb, Village manager and secretary and bulletin editor for AACA, is show coordinator.

"We expect at least 50 fine cars grouped in the Horseless Carriage (through 1915), Antique (1916-1942), and Classic (1925-1948) categories," he says. "Besides the antique and vintage cars there'll be hot rod, cus-

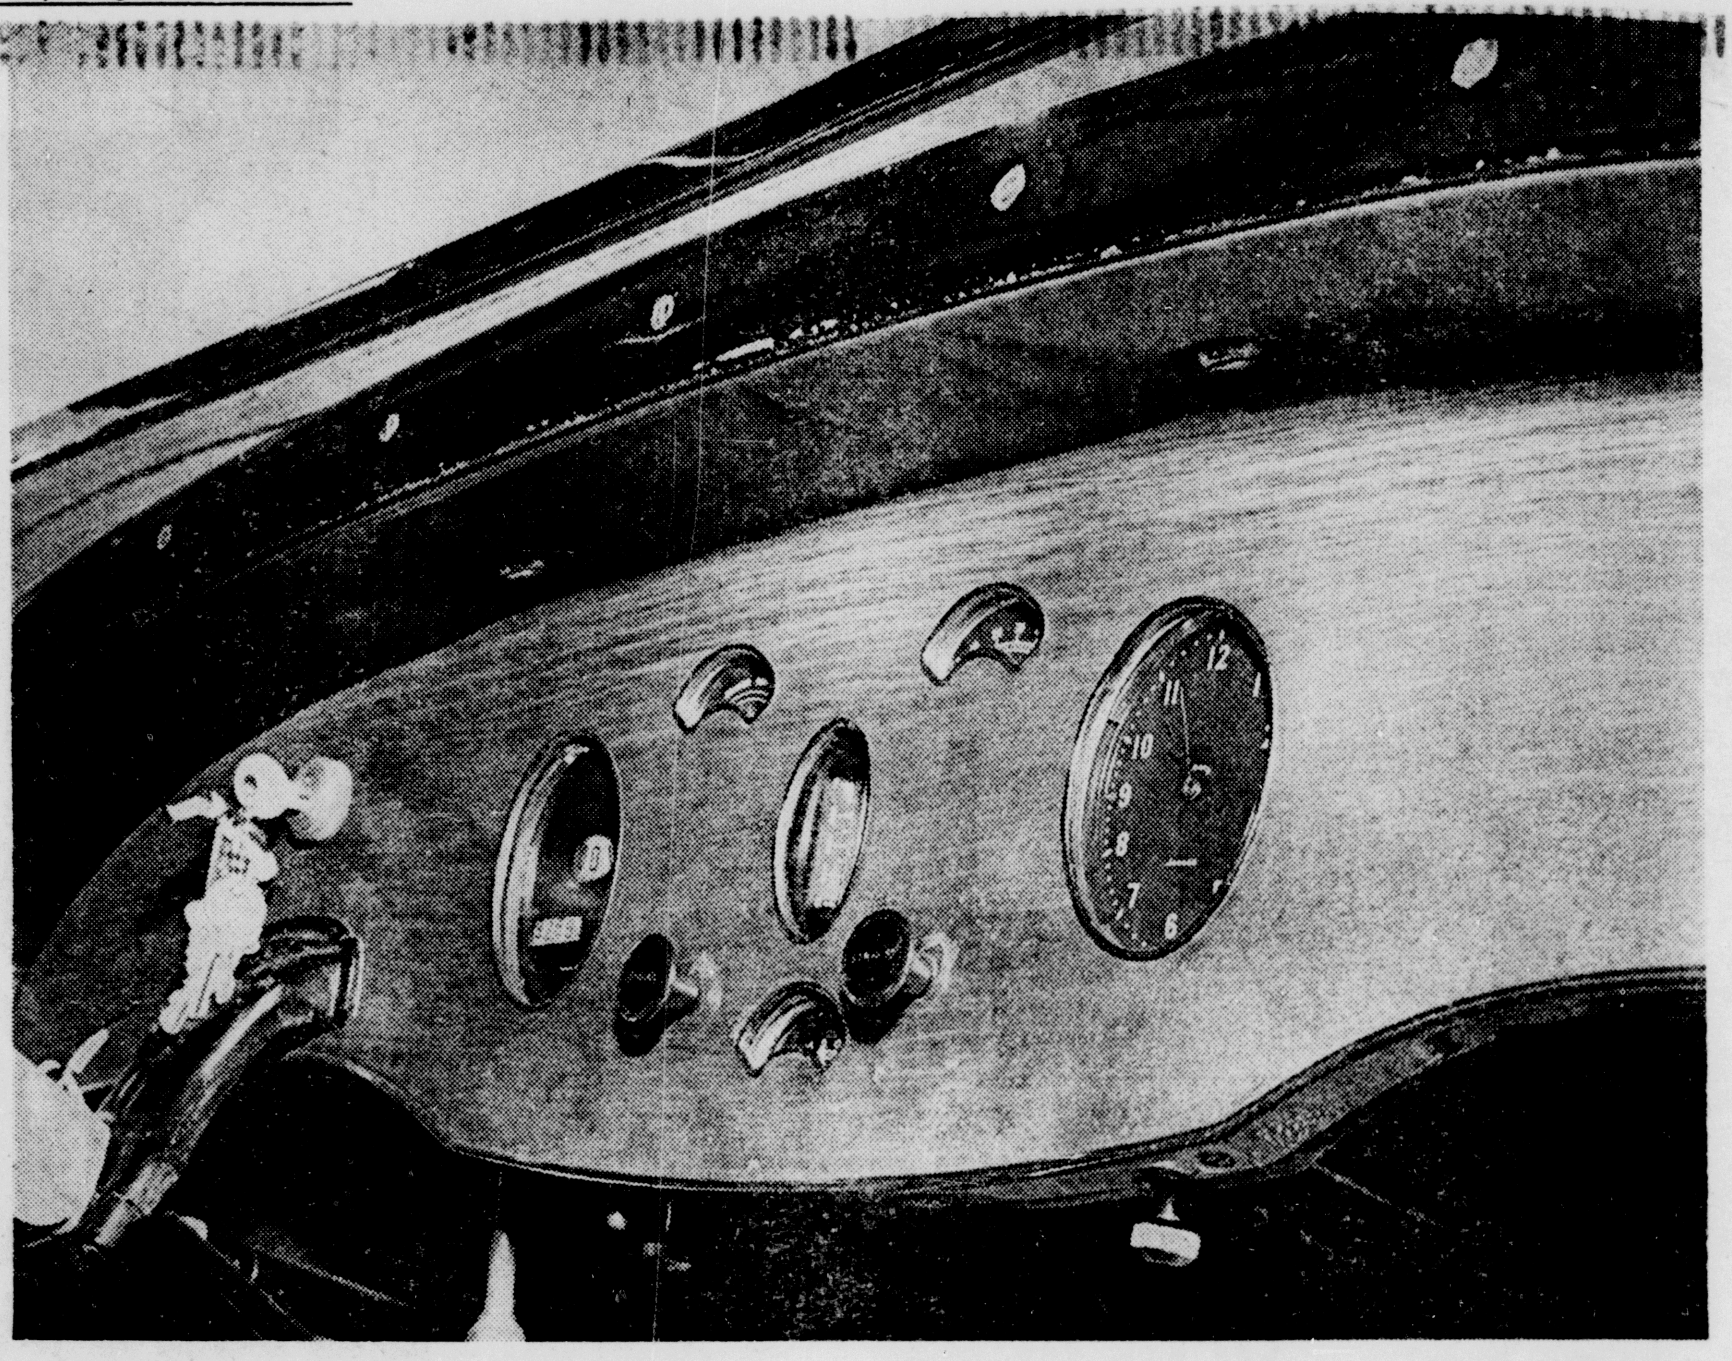
The Car Just Like Dad Used To Drive



THE DASHBOARD of John Sweeny's 1929 Packard runabout will bring back memories for others who used to drive a car like it, when the instruments were fewer, but always reliable. Like the rest of the car, except for the chrome, the dashboard was covered with a blue paint when Sweeny acquired the automobile. Its removal was part of a long and painstaking restoration project.

tom, sport and super sport cars vieing for prizes. Admission is $1, children under 12 free."

The Northern California Kidney Foundation, a three-year-old lay organization, is aided by a Scientific Advisory Council made up of 25 Bay Area doctors. Marin is represented by Dr. James Sheppard.

THE FOUNDATION maintains a drug bank program which provides the expensive medication vital for treatment, either free or at cost; provides assistance to patients who have reached the terminal stage of kidney disease with either kidney transplants or the artificial kidney machine; maintains a part-time renal clinic at San Francisco General Hospital, and sponsors an early detection program.

A recent United States Public Health survey showed more than eight million people afflicted with undetected kidney diseases. In Northern California, the Foundation predicts helping less than half of the more than 300 patients seeking transplants or treatment because of limited facilities and funds.

Jose Alvarez, NCKF's Marin fund-raising chairman, comments, "Marin is a big county with a big heart. The people will respond when they know the grave need. The Foundation hopes that volunteers will soon form a Marin chapter. That would be a major step toward establishing a local drug bank and other services."

TAKING ON HIS Packard's restoration was a new experience for Sweeny: "I'd always tinkered with cars but never did any big jobs. After we bought the Packard, Robin gave me a complete set of engine tools for Christmas and I studied and read. The first thing I discovered about the car was that it was full of Cromwell's X-3, an engine additive that had kept the car glued together. When that was cleaned out, there was nothing left but death rattles.

"It took a year and a lot of beer parties in the garage to rebuild the engine. Then we had our first launching party. It almost ended in disaster. The car went dead on Bridgeway and spurted oil all over the place. We towed her, all 4,000 pounds of her, up San Carlos so she could coast into my garage.

"We didn't bargain on anyone coming around the curve but they did. We crossed lanes at the crucial moment; I swooped into my garage and the little Isetta landed in the rose bushes across the street. Fortunately no one was hurt.

"The trouble was in the battery; we hadn't grounded it right.

"THE NEXT BLOW-UP came 2,000 miles later. That time a piece of the engine blew out; a connecting rod bolt had given up. It was one of the original ones and it wasn't the bolt's fault. I'd torqued it too hard.

"Then she was in the garage for two and a half years. It took that long to rebuild the engine and restore the interior."

"We've had some great experiences with the car," Mrs Sweeny recalls. "I think the most frightening and most unexpected was when the helicopter news reporter swooped down and signaled for me to slow down so he could inspect the car. He descended, took a thorough look, yelled thanks and took off."

"WE DON'T KEEP it wrapped in cellophane; it's used all the time," Robin continues. "Even for car pooling Tara and Sarah to St. Hilary's. Sister says that on the days I drive, the dismissal period breaks down completely.

"We use it every year for the Little League Opening Day Parade, and have often participated in the Fourth of July Bolinas parades. Last year we toured San Simeon with a caravan of classic cars and rendezvoused with a caravan from Los Angeles.

"This year Tara wanted to

THE CHROME ON his 1929 Packard Runabout had been sprayed a silver hue, hiding the natural beauty of the spare tire carriers and other parts. This John Sweeny carefully removed, so that today the venerable old motor car looks very much as it did when it first came off the production line.

have a birthday-hiking party on Bolinas Ridge. We had to take two cars and to keep the kids happy half went up in the Packard, the other half rode down it it. You can get seven kids into it uncomfortably."

"THE LOL IS very photogenic, too," John adds proudly. She's been used in a series of Macy ads and will appear in McCall's feature story on Merryvale Antiques.

"And it's a great car for politicking: guaranteed elections. No one's ever lost who has used it. We've traveled around the town and the county for Jan Dyk, twice elected to the Sausalito City Council; for Michael Wornum's 1968 board of supervisors campaign; and, in the recent primaries for Peter Behr."

It proved a winner in 1968 for Robin Sweeny when she threw her hat into the political ring for a seat on the Sausalito City Council.

TWO YEARS LATER, Robin considers the goals achieved as the most rewarding aspect of the job. Like the recent $500,600 bond issue passed; the biggest one of any consequence in the city's history. It will finance the Central Waterfront Plan, a six-block site with most of the land underwater, designed to be used for civic buildings, a library, recreational activities and a yacht basin. The emphasis is on keeping open water.

Before winning the council seat, Robin worked with the Save Our Shores committee in 1964-65 to protest a 40-acre waterfront development with 20 acres of filling for the bay. Faced with 1,000 protesting signatures the council vetoed the project. For further waterfront protection, the council declared a three year moratorium on Bay fills, the first town in the Bay Area to make the move.

Residents of Sausalito since 1953, Robin, a surgical nurse, is from New York, and Sweeny, born in San Francisco and raised in Marin, is a marine insurance underwriter. An expert sailor, he was commodore of the Sausalito Yacht Club in 1961 and, from 1965-67 served on the Sausalito Planning Commission.

HE IS A member of the Antique Automobile Club of America, Golden Gate Region, and the Classic Car Club.

A stickler for authenticity, Sweeny enjoys judging car shows and usually does three a year. Some of the points he looks for are the car's appeal as an art object; how well it has been preserved; how authentic ("This can be bad. Some cars get a plastic look from bad paint jobs or the wrong colors, and then there's the question of settling for vinyl instead of leather as well as other details."); and, the caliber of restoration.

At the word restoration, Sweeny says patiently, wistfully, "With the LOL, problems are always cropping up. Not long ago she needed her starter rebuilt. Now she's due for elective surgery; she has a sick piston."

"We could always sell her, dad. Couldn't we?" Tara teases.

"Yes," the Sweenys chorus, "but we probably never will."

A History Of The Tiburon Peninsula

(Editor's Note: This history of the Tiburon Peninsula is another of the manuscripts completed by the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian, prior to her death, for publication in the Marin Magazine.)

By FLORENCE DONNELLY

The early history of the Tiburon Peninsula is the story of a series of strong men, each of whom left his permanent imprint upon the area.

The first was a daring Spanish naval officer, Lt. Juan de Ayala, commander of the San Carlos, who sailed his ship into San Francisco Bay in the summer of 1775 and found a snug anchorage within a cove in an island that he named Nuestra Senora de Los Angeles and is today's Angel Island.

De Ayala and his aides charted San Francisco Bay and named a number of places. And among the points visited and explored were the nearby Marin coastline.

BUT IN THE historic sense the De Ayala visit was a fleeting one and it was left to an Irish native who became a naturalized Mexican citizen, John T. or Juan Reed, to make a deeper impression upon the area.

Reed was given a vast land grant that covered much of Southern Marin. In return for the grant, made in 1834, he was to build a sawmill that would provide badly needed wood for the presidio and pueblo of Yerba Buena or San Francisco. Thus the name of the rancho — Rancho Corte Madera del Presidio, meaning "the cutting of wood for the presidio."

Reed built his sawmill in what is now Mill Valley.

RICHARD HENRY Dana Jr. in his "Two Years Before the Mast" described the abundance of timber in the area in relating how his ship had anchored in San Francisco Bay to take on a cargo of hides plus wood and water "for both of which San Francisco is the best place on the coast."

Dana marveled: "A small island, situated about two leagues from the anchorage, called by us Wood Island and by the Spaniards Isla de los Angeles, was covered with trees to the water's edge; and to this two of our crew, who . . . could handle an axe like a plaything, were sent every morning to cut wood. In about a week, they had cut enough to last a year . . . . "

Most probably, the water for the ship came from the sweet springs of the Tiburon Peninsula.

REED'S RANCHO covered 8,878.8 acres and included the peninsula. There Reed set up a large cattle ranch and called it his Portero de la Punta del Tiburon — Pasture of Point Tiburon. His daughter, Hilarita, and his son-in-law, Dr. Benjamin Lyford, continued, after the pioneer Reed's death in 1843 leaving his estate to his widow and three surviving children, to exercise a great influence upon the history of the Tiburon area.

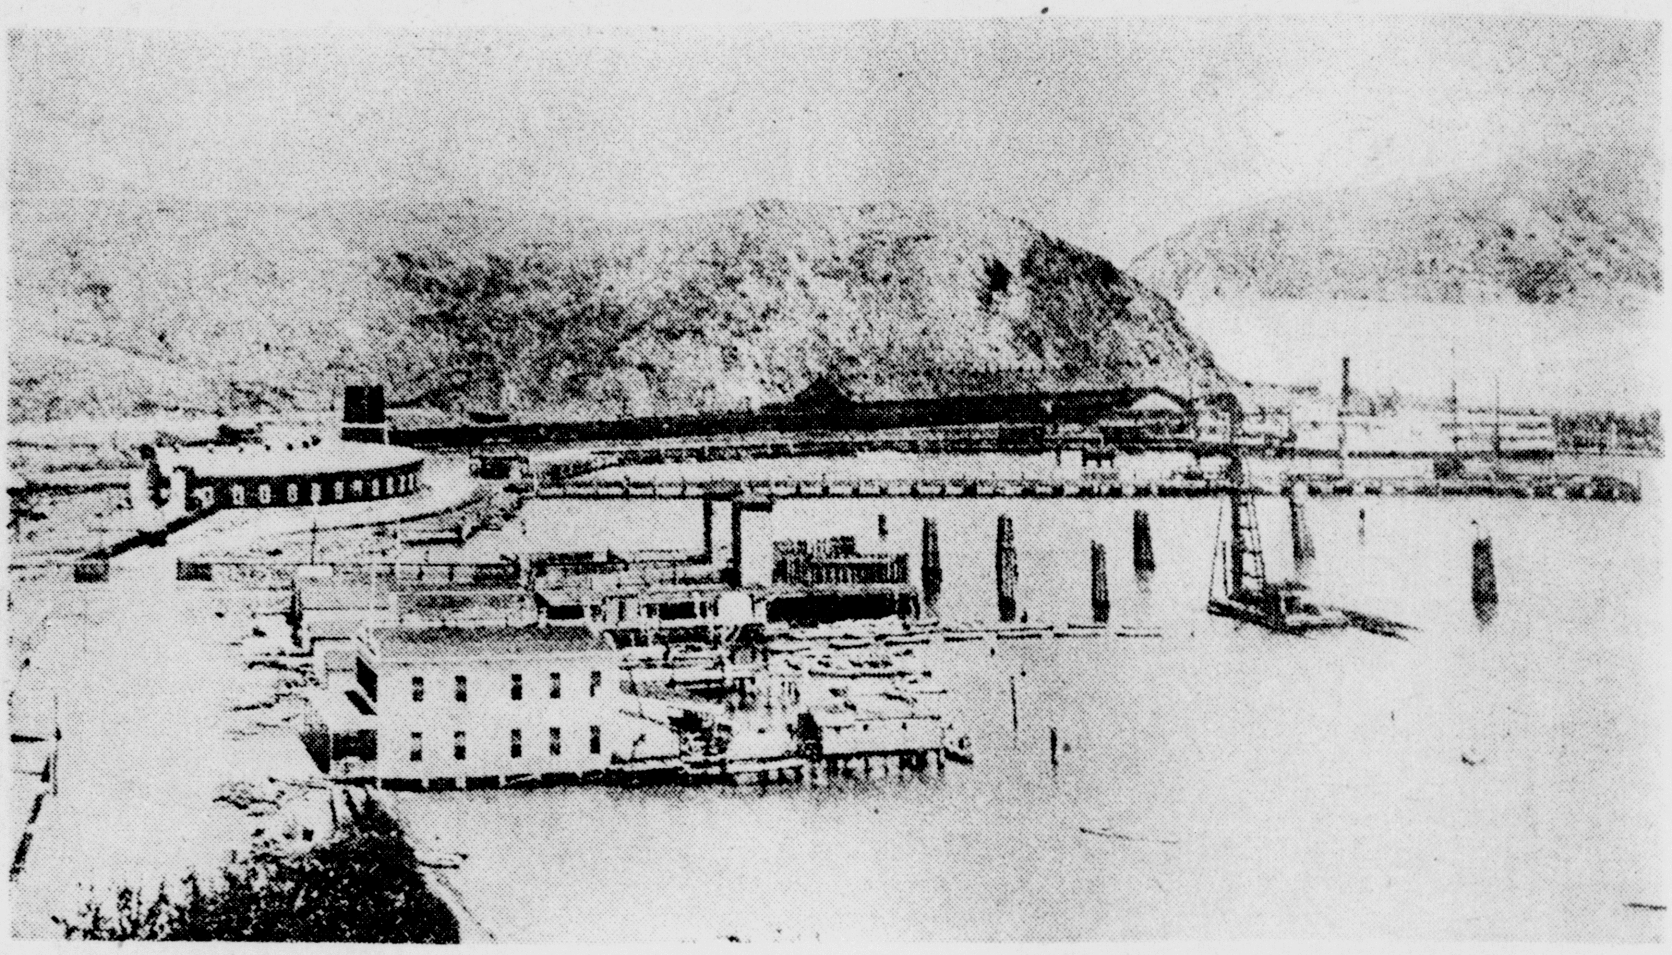
But the Reed-Lyford story has been told in detail earlier by this writer in other articles in this magazine. And there were other men who also left their stamp upon the peninsula — men such as Jose Yves Limantour, Israel Kershaw and Benjamin Rush Buckelew.

Limantour is an especially fascinating character, and Helen Van Cleave Park, a director of the Marin County Historical Society and an active historian herself, has done special research upon him.

LIMANTOUR, SHE says, was a Frenchman who became a naturalized Mexican citizen, as had Reed. As a partner with the Bordeaux firm of Bizet and Russell he set sail with his ship the Ayacucho for California, flying a Mexican flag and under a Mexican captain, with a cargo of luxury goods that included French silk brocades, clothing, perfumes, brandies, cheese, sweetmeats and condiments.

These were goods not carried by the Boston trade ships and craved by the rancheros of California.

The Ayacucho reached Monterey and then set sail for San Francisco Bay, but somehow missed the Golden Gate and continutd north along the coast. On Oct. 27, 1841, the ship was stranded on a sandbar at the entrance to what became known as Limantour Bay, an inlet of Drake's Bay.



THIS PHOTOGRAPH of early Point Tiburon was printed by the Marin Journal in 1893 in its "Souvenir of Marin County." Five years later that newspaper said of Tiburon: "Besides the railroad population there is a sprinkling of fishermen from sunny Italy and the isles of Greece, who live in the hulks of old vessels sunk in the sand or in little cabins along the shore . . . " (Photo courtesy of Mrs. F. Pfeffer)

LIMANTOUR AND his men succeeded in salvaging about three-fourths of the cargo and getting it to the beach. There they remained marooned for some time until eventually they were shown —perhaps by friendly Indians — the direction to San Francisco Bay.

The cargo was taken to Yerba Buena where Limantour dried out the goods and set up a store to offer it for sale.

Officals of the Hudson Bay Co. arrived in Yerba Buena on Dec. 1, 1841, among them Duflot de Mofras, a Frenchman instructed by his government to submit a report on his observations along the Pacific Coast. De Mofras was delighted to find in Limantour a man with whom he could converse in his native tongue. De Mofras advised his new friend to acquire land on San Francisco Bay.

LIMANTOUR, however, first returned to Mexico, then came back to Yerba Buena in 1843. The Mexican government's Department of California was in a desperate financial crisis, and Limantour loaned money to hard-pressed Gov. Manuel Micheltorena.

From 1846 to 1850 California was occupied by United States military forces. Then, in 1850, it was admitted to the Union. The U.S. government appointed a land commission to review all California land grants.

Limantour returned to California from one of his trips to Mexico in the winter of 1853, and then, on Feb. 3, 1854, filed two claims with the land commission.

ONE LAID CLAIM to about 16,000 acres in San Francisco, and the other to the islands of Alcatraz, Yerba Buena and the Farallones and to the "sobrante" or residue land of Tiburon. This last especially caused surprise, for it had been generally thought that the Reed grant had included all of that land.

In the final days before the filing deadline, Limantour placed six more claims for California land with the commission.

For three years the Limantour claims were contested before the land commission. In 1856, one commissioner confirmed the San Francisco claim. The same year another commissioner approved the claim of Limantour for the islands of Alcatraz, Yerba Buena, Angel and the Farallones, and for the sobrante land of the Corte Madera del Presidio.

AN APPEAL was made to the United States District Court and presented for the government by the famous attorney William Blanding who had arrived in San Francisco in 1854 and had been appointed U.S. attorney the following year. His son, Gordon, also a lawyer, was later to have a palatial estate of his own on Belvedere Island, then regarded as part of the Punto del Tiburon.

In December, 1856, Limantour was indicted for fraud and perjury on the testimony of a witness who later was to retract his accusations. Limantour posted bond and went to Mexico to seek evidence and witnesses to support his case. By August, 1857, he was back in San Francisco, demanding that the government bring the fraud case to an immediate trial.

This time the government's case was handled by a new U.S. attorney, Peter de la Torre. And trial witnesses on both sides included many prominent pioneers such as Capt. William A. Richardson, Henry W. Halleck, Pablo de la Guerre, Jean Vioget, Fernando Feliz and Juan N. Padilla.

LIMANTOUR FELT his case was going well, and thus made another trip to the home he maintained in Mexico City in late 1857. But there were

"Why Did My Pre-Shrunk Skirt Shrink?"

The manufacturer wasn't exactly truthful. The skirt is constructed of two fabrics, bonded together. The inner layer is preshrunk. The outer layer, probably in the interest of manufacturer economy, is not pre-shrunk. The manufacturer's theory and hope was that the preshrunk inner fabric, bonded to the outer fabric, would keep the latter from shrinking. It didn't. The manufacturer should have labeled your skirt "Partially preshrunk." Actually, the word "Pre-shrunk" should not have been used in relation to your skirt. It was not dimensionally stable.

The Tiburon Peninsula—How It Grew

presented in court enlargements of photographs of Limantour's supporting documents that seemed to show inconsistencies in the printing, the paper and the Mexican seal.

To the astonishment of Limantour's lawyers and of their client as well, they lost the case.

Many persisted in the belief that Limantour had been framed. But now all his hopes of owning the islands or a part of the Tiburon Peninsula were gone.

Limantour, however, did not allow his troubles in California to ruin his life. He remained in Mexico City, amassed a fortune there and lived a long life. Several members of the family still live in Mexico and remain prominent in Mexican affairs.

THE CONTROVERSIAL role that Limantour played on the Tiburon Point proper was assumed by Israel Kershaw on Belvedere Island, which, even in those times, was not technically a separate island except at high tide, but attached to the peninsula by a causeway.

But unlike Limantour, Kerhaw was an actual resident of the property he claimed. For some 30 years he lived on Belvedere, and for a good part of that time he and his family were its only occupants.

He remains a somewhat shadowy figure in history, and when his name pops up from time to time in the old historic records, it is frequently with varying spellings — Kershaw, Kashaw, Kashow.

JEANNE SKINNER Van Nostrand wrote for the California Historical Society Quarterly issue of December, 1942, of Israel Kashaw as a member of a party organized in New York City in the winter of 1848-49, its members "highly educated, of fine appearance, good moral habits and unblemished reputations, from the best families of New York," that had as its purpose an overland trek to California.

Second in command was John Woodhouse Audubon, under Col. Henry Livingston Webb. Audubon had served a 17-year apprenticeship to his famous father in the compilation of "Birds of America," and one of his prime purposes in making the westward expedition was to collect, sketch and preserve wildlife specimens along the way.

It is quite likely that Kershaw obtained from Audubon at that time an interest in wild species and their conservation that he was to demonstrate later at Belvedere, to the benefit of later generations.

THE NEW YORK company made the journey west along a route that first swung south into Mexico then north again, and endured terrible suffering before finally reaching California, their ranks decimated by cholera and hunger.

Kershaw thus arrived in California in 1850, but it was not until about 1855 that he first saw Belvedere Island, isolated but beautiful, and decided to settle there.

He was a big man, a strong one, an active and hotly-tempered person, and his name under one of its several spellings appeared in the press or public records from time to time.

MINUTES OF the district court for 1858 and 1859 list him as a juror. The Marin County Journal of July 29, 1865, reported he had been drawn to serve as a grand juror. A story in the same paper on June 17 of that year had told of an inquest after the body of a man had been found "at Kashaw's Island on Saucelito Bay." At least twice he was involved physically in altercations.

Recorded in Book 1 of Deeds, Page 12, is a Feb. 21, 1866, transaction by which Israel Ka-

THE HISTORY of the Tiburon Peninsula and Belvedere Island has been a story of strong men who sparked its development while preserving much of its original charm. One of them was George E. Ring, who owned 320 acres on the peninsula fronting on the bay, who served Marin as a county supervisor, and who gave his name to Ring's Point on Marin's early maps.

Tiburon, Belvedere Story Is Eventful

shaw bought from Mary Jane King 25 head of dairy cows and five head of California horses.

The great register listed him as Israel Kashaw, 49, a farmer, and the records of 1866 show a "Kashaw" indebtedness to John J. Conlin of $400 for the construction of a draw in the bridge over the entrance to "Kashaw Lagoon on the public road from Tiburon."

THE SAN FRANCISCO Bulletin reported and the Marin County Journal reprinted on Sept. 18, 1869, an account of a duel between two San Franciscans "at Kershaw's Island."

There were other recorded transactions and agreements involving Kershaw, and Sausalito newspaper reports of the delivery of oysters from his waters to John F. Morgan.

A map of Marin County compiled by County Surveyor Hiram Austin in 1873 shows "Kershaw Island — 210 acres."

IN THAT SAME year on March 24 an agreement was recorded by which Kershaw proposed to sell his island and tidelands holdings, with the exception of two houses, to William T. Coleman, the San Francisco and San Rafael capitalist, for $5,000. Terms called for a $100 down payment, a $2,000 installment after Coleman had examined the land, and the remainder after Kershaw had vacated his house.

Apparently, however, the deal never went through, and the Kershaws remained on their island.

The 1885 directory of coast counties still listed Israel Kashaw as owner of 148 acres and master mariner, Israel Kashaw Jr. as postmaster and Acey Kashaw as a fisherman.

BUT SINCE 1865 Kershaw had been involved in litigation, seeking to defend his property claims.

The main fight was instigated by a visiting New York lawyer, James Clinton Bolton, who persuaded the Reed heirs that although the island where the Kershaws lived was not described in the first official U.S. survey of the Reed grant made in 1858, they could and should nevertheless lay claim to it, plus the smaller neighboring island that was to be called Corinthian as well.

Bolton was promised half of any land he could win for the heirs beyond the 1858 survey. He filed suit in U.S. Circuit Court not only for the eviction of Kershaw, but for damages as well. The lands in question were the Belvedere and Corinthian islands and their narrow connections with the Tiburon shore.

KERSHAW AT first fought the suit through his attorney, James McMillan Shafter. But abruptly, on March 14, 1868, he consented to a judgment by which the land would go to Bolton, but without monetary damages.

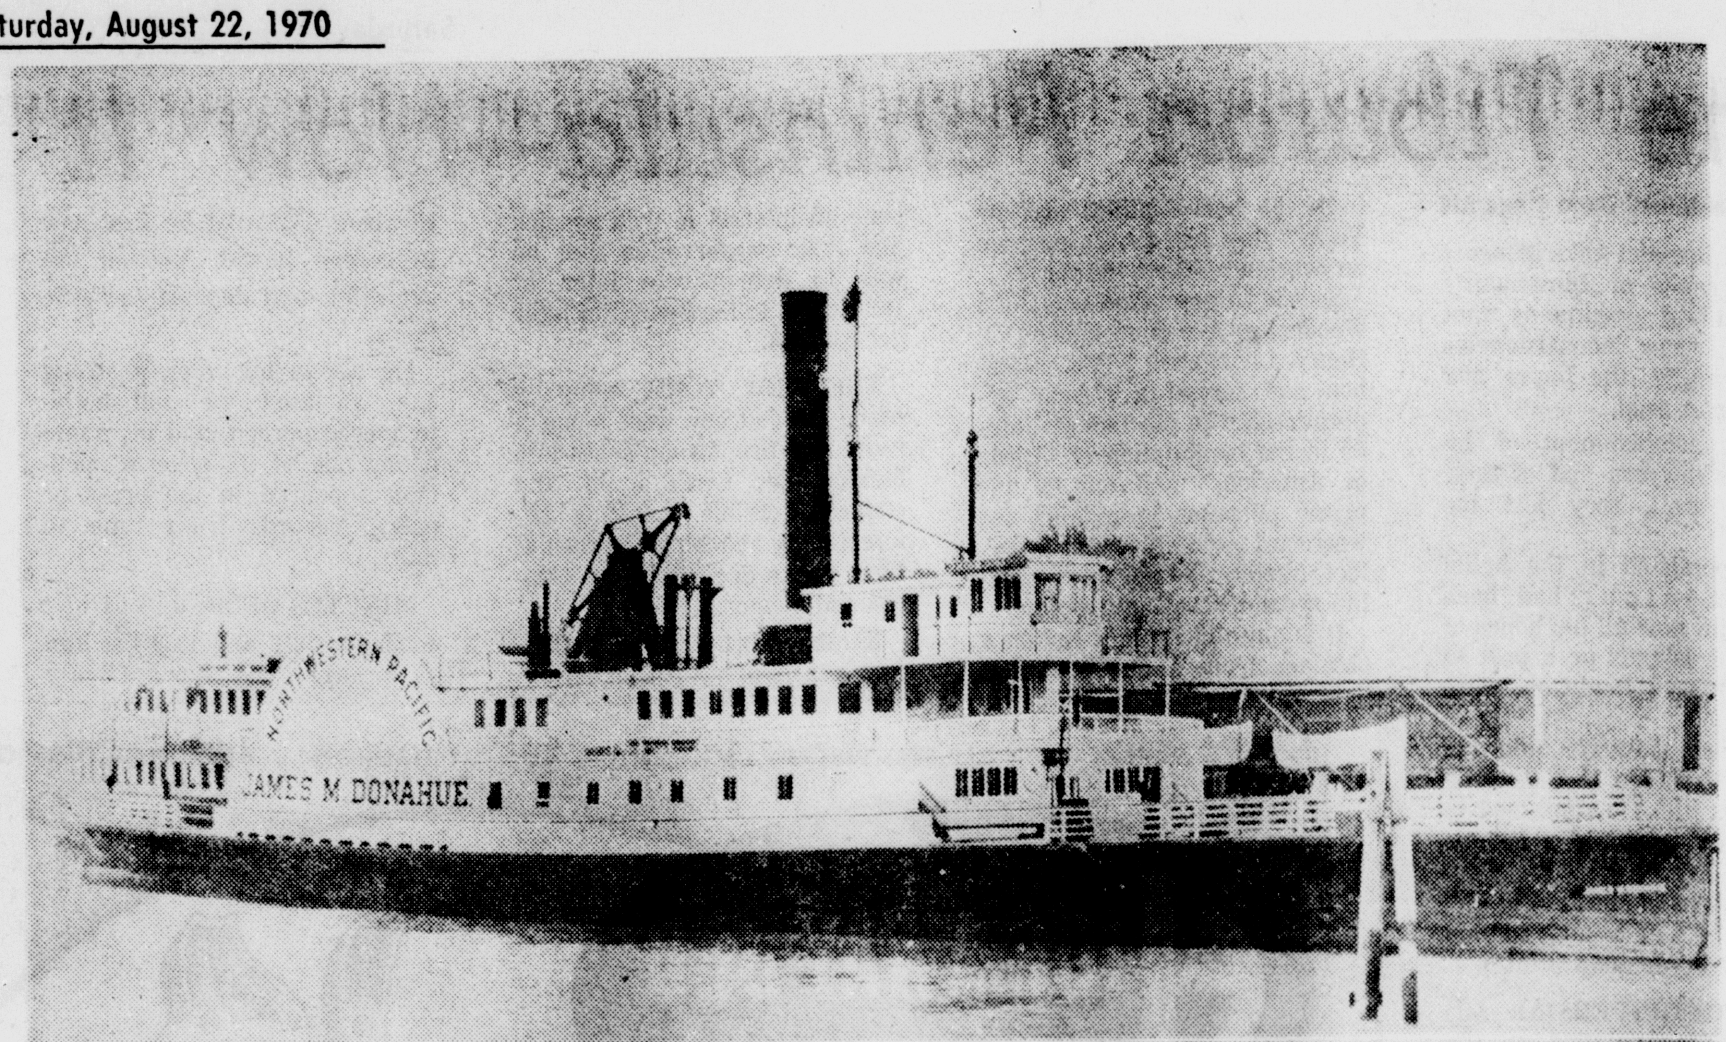
Despite this outcome of the suit, Kershaw remained on the island. And the issue became more clouded when the U.S. government declared it a military reservation, and all the more so when a New Yorker, Thomas B. Valentine, who had come West originally in the same party as Audubon and Kershaw, began to buy up Bolton's interests.

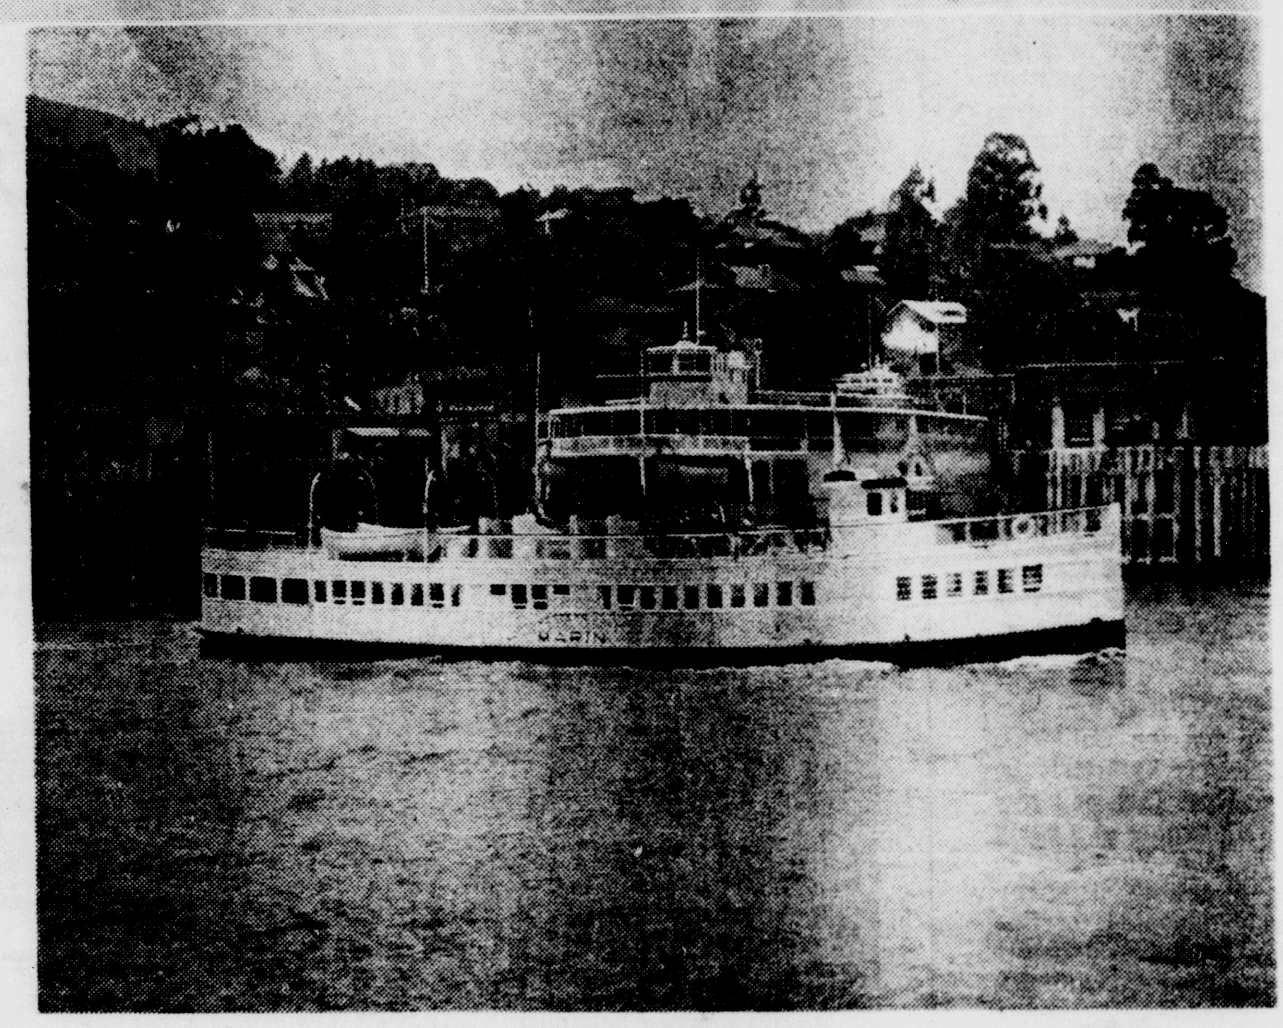
Valentine began a campaign to oust both Kershaw and the U.S. military from the island, claiming connivance between the "squatter" and the government.

AT ONE TIME the Army did serve an ultimatum upon Kershaw, giving him until Jan. 10, 1872, to remove his stock and improvements. An extension was first granted. Then, ultimately, a lease for the pasturing of his stock on the island.

It continued to be the Kershaw home until in 1885 a final court decision held that Belvedere and Corinthian islands, after all, had been a part of the original Reed grant. Valentine had won. Kershaw had lost his island. And the Army its military reservation.

The U.S. marshals enforced the court order, and Kershaw was evicted, returning to San Francisco. Valentine still wasn't satisfied and sued for back rent. He was awarded but $1,000. And Kershaw retained his claim to tideland property off and around the island shores.





LONG A part of the Tiburon scene has been the ferryboat. The proudest of them all was the James M. Donahue, above, named by rail and ferry magnate Peter Donahue for his only son. It was succeeded at right by the Marin, originally the Requa, but rechristened after it burnt and was rebuilt. The Marin was long in service on the Sausaltio to Tiburon run making a stop at Belvedere.

BENJAMIN RUSH Buckelew was of a different stripe from Kershaw, something of a visionary who planned a "dream city" on the peninsula's outer shoreline that he called California City.

Buckelew was also a New Yorker. On Dec. 1, 1850, he wrote his wife: "I am now the owner of 100 square miles of land in the best locality in California. I have a steam sawmill on the Reed place and am preparing to build a large wharf and lay out California City. I am also preparing to run a steam ferryboat between San Francisco and my place . . . "

Buckelew anticipated a metropolis, but his project failed and eventually was moved in its entirety to his other property at San Quentin.

THERE IS STILL today on the Tiburon Peninsula shoreline an area known as California City, but the tract of land laid out by Buckelew as such was another three miles to the north of that site.

In that same area is Ring's Point, bearing the name of yet another influential peninsula pioneer.

George E. Ring was a native of New Hampshire who came to California in 1863 and bought 320 acres on the Tiburon Peninsula that he later expanded. He was to serve as a county supervisor and prospered as a rancher.

PETER DONAHUE is yet another strong personality who left his mark upon Tiburon. He brought his San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad to the community in April of 1884 and with it most of his settlement of Donahue's Landing on the Petaluma River, and provided peninsula residents with ferry service to San Francisco.

The story of Belvedere and Tiburon is not, however, entirely a story of a few prominent men. Events and places, too, had their impact. And a company, the Belvedere Land Co., organized in 1888, had a continuing influence.

The company bought a large parcel of land, and surveyed and subdivided it. Roads were built, fresh water was piped to every lot and all houses were required "to sewer directly into the bay."

Peninsula History An Eventful One

cized the "night boats" traveling to and from San Francisco and made mention, too, of "fine fishing, beautiful walks, an unsurpassed marine view, unequaled sailing and rowing." Attractive homes were built and the population began to grow.

By 1896, Belvedere was ready for incorporation. Minutes for the trustee meeting of Dec. 23, 1896, listed the trustees as Peter Dean, L.L. Dunbar, J.W. Pew, V.J.A. Rey and A.G. Fusenot. H.F. Burhmeister was clerk, C.O. Perry the treasurer and N.A. McLean the marshal.

If the new city was mainly one of fine homes, it was not completely without industry. Union Fish Co. began operation of its plant on the west side of Belvedere in 1875, and that processing continued until 1937 when a fire destroyed wharves and warehouses.

SCHOONERS CAME from Alaska carrying both cod and salmon. Trays of fish dried in the sun. The late Parker F. Wood recalled being on a ship that took on cans of salmon at Belvedere.

The Marin Journal of April 7, 1898, reported:

"The residents of Belvedere have a habit of looking down upon the people on the plain. From their lofty eyrie they could hardly do otherwise. They even look down upon the sea."

The Journal took note that the Belvedere public school was prospering "under the charge of Miss Boynton" with 25 pupils, that a fleet of 40 yachts and 30 arks was moored in the bay, and that a half dozen clubhouses furnished accommodations for visitors from the city.

MRS. TEN BROECK, an early resident, could remember when there were but a few houses and the fishing company buildings on the island "and all the rest was over-run by wild cattle and goats, and rattlesnakes were everywhere."

But by Dec. 28, 1896, urbanization had reached a point where the Belvedere City Council felt it necessary to enact an ordinance prohibiting the shooting or trapping of quail, grouse, dove, pigeon, duck, goose, rabbit, squirrel "or other wild or tame game."

Another ordinance now prohibited the running at large of "horses, mares, cows, colts, calves, bulls, sheep, goats, pigs, oxen, mules or asses."

IN 1899 THE real estate firm of Shainwald, Buckee & Co. could run an advertisement in the Marin Journal claiming Belvedere to be "the most popular of any location on the Bay of San Francisco . . . Where there were no houses a short time ago, there are now 50, all of them most modern and artistic in design, occupied by owners who are most widely known in the select circles of society."

"Belvedere is laid out in villa lots of liberal dimensions facing well-made avenues. The tract is covered with a fine growth of natural forest trees. Sheltered from the severe trade winds but with the heat of the summer tempered by the neighborhood of the bay, the climate is absolute perfection.

"ITS GEOGRAPHICAL location and the absolute control by the company of all avenues of approach secure it from the nuisance of outside intrusion that beset so many of the resorts of California.

"The bayshore offers numerous landings for steam launches and pleasure craft, and its clear waters are unrivaled for bathing purposes and afford unlimited facilities for boating and yachting."

Arks or houseboats, many of them luxurious, anchored in Belvedere Cove during the summer, then in winter were towed or poled to the shelter of the lagoon under a drawbridge that was raised twice a year to permit this migration. When much of the cove was filled for boulevard construction, the arks were landlocked. Some of them remain there today.

BELVEDERE residents enjoyed water sports and such spectaculars as "Belvedere's Night in Venice." Along with a story of that event, the Marin Journal in September of 1899 ran artists' sketches of houseboats and small craft decked with garlands and adorned with Chinese lanterns.

Said the reporter: "The decorations and illuminations on the houseboats and crafts of all kinds and the beautiful homes and buildings of Belvedere were lavish and artistic. The number of visitors was estimated at 7,000 . . ."

Harry B. Allen, who had loved Belvedere since boyhood and who grew up to become head of the Belvedere Land Co., was responsible for one of his community's greatest assets. It was he who decided to buy 23 acres from the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Co. along the north side of the lagoon and develop a picturesque community upon its shores. Allen also presented a park to Belvedere that was dedicated in May of 1958.

SAILING HAS long been an important activity in both Belvedere and Tiburon.

The San Francisco Yacht Club was organized in that city in 1869, but moved, first to Sausalito and then to Belvedere. The site of the old Belvedere Hotel was acquired in 1925 and the new San Francisco Yacht Clubhouse dedicated in 1934.

Nearby, but just across the line in Tiburon, is the Corinthian Yacht Club, chartered in 1886. It built its facilities on the tip of what was then called Valentine's Island, but which later took its name from the yacht club.

MANY OF THE fine homes of Belvedere including the Barber, Bridge, Kohen, Spence, Harrison, Hendry and Guerrez residences, were the work of Dan McLean, who arrived there in 1892 and established a construction business.

McLean was also the organizer of the Belvedere Fire Department and for many years its chief. As building inspector he did much to preserve the natural beauty of Belvedere. He saw long service on the city council and was a director of the Marin Municipal Water District and the Marin Mosquito Abatement District.

But one of the earliest mansions in Belvedere was a five-story, 22-room place built by Willis Polk in 1862. The father of James L. Heynemann bought the mansion and estate in 1900, and later the house was demolished and a more modern structure erected on its site.

BOOK B OF Deeds for 1892 records transfers of land by the Belvedere Land Co. to Edward B. Hedge, Helena Starr, Margaret Denny, William S. Tevis, Charles E. Miller, J.J. Rey, Lydia A. Spalding, Arthur Page, John L. Bradbury, R.L. Wheeler, Mary L. Forbes, E.M. Thomas and others.

The Great Register of Marin County in 1910 lists 107 voters in the Belvedere District — all Republicans except for 11.

Many of the large estates of Belvedere were being subdivided. Gordon Blanding, the wealthy corporation lawyer, reversed that practice by buying the entire tip of Belvedere Island and razing all its few houses but one.

THE HOUSE HE retained was a mansion built originally by a rich banker. To this he added a large gallery where he displayed his paintings by such notable artists as William Keith, who, incidentally, resided in Belvedere for a short time. Installed in the art gallery was a huge pipe organ.

Blanding erected three other houses on his spacious acreage, one a seven-bedroom place, the others a carriage house and a cottage for his chief gardener. Guards were stationed at the gates. There was a boathouse with private dock for the cabin cruiser in which Blanding commuted to San Francisco.

Although the multi-millionaire did not live on the estate in the last years of his life, he continued to keep a full retinue of servants and gardeners there.

NO ONE BETTER exemplified the luxurious living with which Belvedere has been identified than did Gordon Blanding.

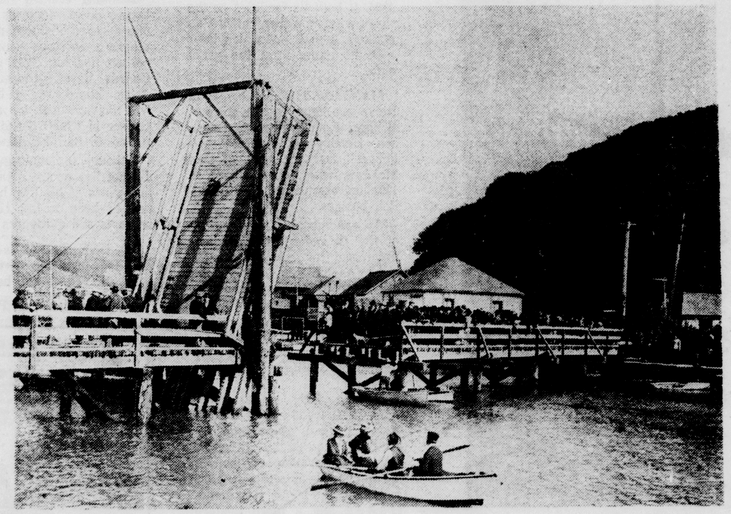
HOUSEBOATS, some of them luxurious in size and accommodations, hillside residences and small landing wharves all can be seen in this photograph showing Belvedere Cove, already a refuge from city life for the affluent.

MANY OF THE buildings in early Tiburon were brought in by railroad magnate Peter Donahue, floated down by barge from his Donahue's Landing on Petaluma River where they had formerly stood. Included was the hotel shown at left.



TWICE A YEAR the drawbridge at the foot of Corinthian Island was raised, to permit boats and arks to enter or leave the lagoon. The winter entry was one of the leading social events of the Belvedere season.

With its city limits unextended, Belvedere, despite such impetus as the 1906 San Francisco earthquake and fire, and the opening of the Golden Gate Bridge, has shown only a slow population growth. Its citizens plainly prefer it that way.

Belvedere's ambitious neighbor, Tiburon, did not incorporate until long after its sister city — in 1964. But by then it had already behind it a long and picturesque history, less one of affluence than Belvedere, but no less interesting and colorful.

THE MARIN Journal of April 7, 1898, reported: "Tiburon — Besides the railroad population there is a sprinkling of fishermen from sunny Italy and the isles of Greece, who live in the hulks of old vessels sunk in the sand or in little cabins along the shore. . . .

"The Catholics have a place of worship on the outskirts of Tiburon. The Tiburon public school has 32 pupils in attendance and has for several years been under the charge of Miss Leeds, a general favorite."

The Journal touched on a local controversy on Aug. 17, 1899, when it wrote:

"THE TIBURON Boulevard has not received the death blow as some appeared to hope and others feared. The prospects now are that the defects in the work will be fixed and the bills paid . . .

"The Journal did not advocate the boulevard as it is now located, but we believe it will make a better road than could have been secured on any other route from San Rafael to Tiburon, and when completed will make one of the finest drives in the state. . . .

"The county surveyor did not make some of the statements credited to him. He was not willing to recommend the acceptance of the road in its present condition, but stated that he thought the county could arrange with the contractor to fix it in an acceptable shape. There was a misunderstanding as to the legal requirements in the case.

"THE ROAD IS a good one and the contractor did much more work upon it than it was intended he should do. In some places the bank was so steep that it was necessary to put a stone wall on the lower side to prevent the dirt from going over the embankment on to private property. Some of this wall, Mr. Richardson claims, is not substantially built and has not the required slope."

The contractor, a Mr. Buckman, was quoted as saying he had already lost "over $2,000" on the project.

The story continued: "The boulevard has been completed from San Rafael south over the hill and across the marsh from Greenbrae, west to connect with the Ross Valley Road, mostly by convict labor. This prison labor will continue the work for about three miles farther. A very good road was built from Tiburon north for about a mile and a half by Dr. Lyford. From the end of the road Mr. Buckman's contract extends about a mile and a half farther north, which will leave a gap of about three miles more for the county to build."

TAXPAYERS IN other parts of the county had protested bitterly the use of general tax funds to pay for the construction of Tiburon Boulevard, part of which today is Paradise Drive. But Hugh McIsaac, Marin County district attorney, ruled the expenditure a legal one.

It was George D. Shearer, pioneer Marin real estate man, who took the keenest interest in the opening of the boulevard linking San Rafael to Tiburon, and who secured free right-of-way grants from Dr. Lyford and other Reed heirs, the Valentine estate and George Ring. In this he was assisted by James H. Wilkins and George Richardson.

And it was Shearer who celebrated the opening of the boulevard by taking county supervisors over it in his handsome "four-in-hand" coach to a barbecue held at El Campo, a then flourishing bayside resort on the peninsula off the new boulevard. To it came San Franciscans by chartered launch and private boats to join Marinites in picnicking, dancing at the pavilion and other pleasures.

THE BOULEVARD project passed near a huge gash in the hillsides from where the rock was quarried, to be crushed, transported by a small railroad to the shoreline, to be used in road work there, or to be shipped by barge across the bay.

Another landmark remembered by those now in their middle years or older was the coaling station at what became known as California City.

Learning of the government plan to buy land on the Tiburon Peninsula, the board of supervisors, according to the Marin Journal of April 16, 1903, "discussed dredging of Belvedere Harbor, it being the probable intention of the government to make the harbor an anchorage."

BUT ON JUNE 23, 1904, the same newspaper reported under the headline "Coaling Station at California City":

"The Navy Department bought the fish plant property at California City for $80,000. The property has been in the hands of the present owners (Lynde and Hough) for more than 30 years and has been used for drying cod and other fish."

The newspaper told, too, of the large amount of money the government proposed to spend for dredging that would permit "a battleship of the make or draft of the Oregon or her sister ships to go to the wharves."

"THE DECISION to select the site was based upon the recommendation of Rear Admiral Bradford," it was added.

The coaling station superintendent and many of the employees made their homes within walking distance of the installation, and it served through World War I. When ships were fueled by oil, its services were no longer needed.

The State of California received permission to operate its California Nautical School, later the California Maritime Academy, at the no longer required station, and the first cadets, to be trained as merchant marine officers, reported in 1931.

DURING THE construction of the Golden Gate Bridge, the California City area was also the location of a plant by which John A. Roebling & Son manufactured the huge cables needed for that mighty span. From 175 to 200 men were employed at what had once been a lumberyard. And the county built a road to accommodate the enterprise.

With the clouds of World War II hovering ominously overhead, the U.S. government asked the state to vacate California City and the Tiburon Naval Net Depot was established there.

Great secrecy was maintained during the war concerning its work and the depot strictly guarded. After peace returned, civilians learned the depot had manufactured hundreds of huge nets for the protection of West Coast and Pacific bases and ports. One of its biggest jobs was a seven-mile-long net that stretched from Sausalito to the San Francisco Marina to keep enemy submarines from the bay.

AFTER THE WAR, Navy men trained at the depot until it was closed in 1958.

California City is now under the direction of the Department of Interior, and located there is the Tiburon Oceanographic Center with the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife and its Tiburon Marine Laboratory and the Bureau of Mines Marine Minerals Technology Center. Nine acres, formerly the Roebling property, were added to its holdings by the government, but two parcels have been declared surplus and upon them are now located two county parks, Paradise Beach, 19 acres and very popular, and Tiburon Uplands, 18 acres, left undeveloped.

If California City was a city that never existed as such except in name, Tiburon remained a struggling railroad and fishing town of the late 1800's and early 1900s that had clung tenaciously to survival.

THEN ITS "business district" consisted only of a couple of grocery and general merchandise stores and a "hash house" or two.

Tiburon residents, however, were not totally disinterested in culture, as indicated by the report in the Marin Journal in November of 1895 that a Temple Library Society had been organized there to establish a free library and reading room.

Ferryboats plying the bay between the town and San Francisco were very much a part of Tiburon life. Largest and most magnificent was the James M. Donahue, named for the only son of Peter Donahue, the rail and ferry magnate.

WHEN THE Northwestern Pacific Railroad came into control, it retired the Donahue as too expensive to operate and bought a smaller steamer, the Requa. The Requa was burned to the waterline in 1911. But using the salvaged hull, the company rebuilt the vessel and christened her the Marin. She was put into service on the Sausalito-Tiburon line with a stop at Belvedere to take on and let off passengers, and continued to transport people for almost 30 years.

Dominating the Tiburon scene is old St. Hilary's Church, a quaint white frame building on a hilltop, built in 1888 on land given by Dr. Benjamin Lyford, and dedicated on Oct. 21 of that year.

St. Hilary's was at first a mission church with Catholic priests from St. Raphael's riding from San Rafael to Tiburon every other Sunday to say mass.

LATER THE old church became a mission of the Star of the Sea Parish in Sausalito.

Population growth on the peninsula resulted in the formation of St. Hilary's Parish, and the building of a new church on Hilary Drive in Tiburon where the first services were held in January of 1954.

The old church suffered at the hands of vandals until the Belvedere-Tiburon Landmarks Society, under the direction of Mrs. Robert Bastian, acquired the building and rededicated it as an historical monument and museum.

NEXT THE wildflowers that thrive on the hillside around the church were preserved with the aid of a $13,500 Open Space Land Program grant. The county obtained title to two acres as a conservation area.

At Tiburon's eastern edge is Keil Cove, a 38-acre estate that Russell Keil inherited from his uncle, Hugo Keil, who in turn had received the property from his father, David Keil who bought the land from Dr. Lyford.

With the building of the Golden Gate Bridge, more and more people from all parts of the Bay Area began coming to Tiburon to enjoy a day of watching the craft on the bay and to lunch or dine in the town's few restaurants.

THE NEW Boardwalk Shopping Center, developed in 1955, provided some new facilities, but Tiburon's Main Street remained a dreary huddle of buildings. A "paint-up, fix-up" campaign, begun by Mrs. Palmer Field and supported by the property owners, changed that remarkably. Old buildings were remodeled or repainted and new ones constructed in keeping with the changed appearance. Smart shops and new restaurants now greet Tiburon visitors.

With the incorporation of Tiburon, its citizens elected on June 2, 1964, as its first council members Anne L. Ellinwood, Fred C. Hannahs, John S. Hoffmire Jr., Leo Souza and Gordon W. Strawbridge.

It was noted that the new city included within its incorporated limits virtually all of Angel Island. Water transportation connects the mainland with the island, a state park and prime tourist attraction. And there is ferry service, as well, between Tiburon and San Francisco.

SCHOOLS AND churches are sources of great pride among the residents of the Tiburon Peninsula.

Mrs. Louise Teather, who has researched and written extensively upon the history of the area, gives this chronology for the development of the school system:

The Reed School District was established in 1874 and the Reed Ranch School was operated in an old house on Jefferson Drive in what is now Belveron West. There was a first class of 29 girls, 10 white boys and one Indian boy, John J. Reed, son of John T. Reed, was one of the original trustees.

IN 1887, THE Reed District divided and the southern portion took on the name of Tiburon School District. The first Tiburon School was a wing added to a building in the railroad yards. In 1901 the trustees purchased a building site lot from Dr. Lyford for $2,000, then considered "a very high price."

An 1896 note in the margin of the Register of School Trustees in the Marin County school superintendent's office reads:

"Belvedere School District was formed from the Tiburon District by the act of incorporation."

WHILE BELVEDERE had voted to incorporate in December, 1896, its official incorporation was not effective until July 1, 1897. Its new school building opened in 1901.

In 1921 the moving of one family, the Chans, with their five children from the pig ranch they operated on Paradise Drive forced the Reed District school to close because of too few pupils. It was annexed by the Belvedere District.

In 1950 the Reed Union School District was formed by joining the Belvedere and Tiburon districts and assuming the name of the area's first district.

THE PENINSULA is part of the Tamalpais Union High School District and its teenagers attended that district's high schools.

The Tiburon Peninsula is also home to a number of private and parochial schools including Marin Country Day School at the peninsula neck, begun in 1956; St. Hilary's Church School, started in 1963; and Belvedere Nursery School with its own building.

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, first established as a mission, was organized as a parish in 1951 and later built an impressive edifice. It, too, has a day school.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Christ, Scientist, completed its striking building opposite the Belvedere Community Hall in 1952.

The Westminister Presbyterian Church of Richardson Bay was established in 1956.

And in 1959, the Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary came to Strawberry Point at the entrance to the peninsula.

First record of a post office for the area concerned the one at Angel Island. But a joint Belveder-Tiburon postoffice now serves all residents of the peninsula.

A LINK WITH the region's colorful past is the old Victorian mansion of Dr. and Mrs. Benjamin Lyford which was brought by barge to land along the water's edge given by Rosie Verrall to the Richardson Bay Foundation and to the Marin Chapter of the National Audubon Society for a nature preserve that attracts visitors from near and far.

Today the peninsula is a site where on its shores beautiful residences and handsome apartment houses have replaced fishermen's cabins, where spacious ranches and vast estates have given way to modern housing developments with paved streets and utilities, where shopping centers occupy land that was once open and quite wild.

But both Belvedere and Tiburon also retain much of their past charm. Belvedere as a quietly luxurious residence center, Tiburon as a picturesque tourist mecca as well as a locale for comfortable homes.

Where once cattle grazed, vaqueros rode and litigants disputed the ownership of the land, today some 2,600 residents live in Belvedere and 5,974 in Tiburon, enjoying the good and modern life yet keenly aware of their roots with the past, as demonstrated by the vigilance and the foresight shown by the Belvedere-Tiburon Landmarks Society in preserving the remaining traces of that heritage.

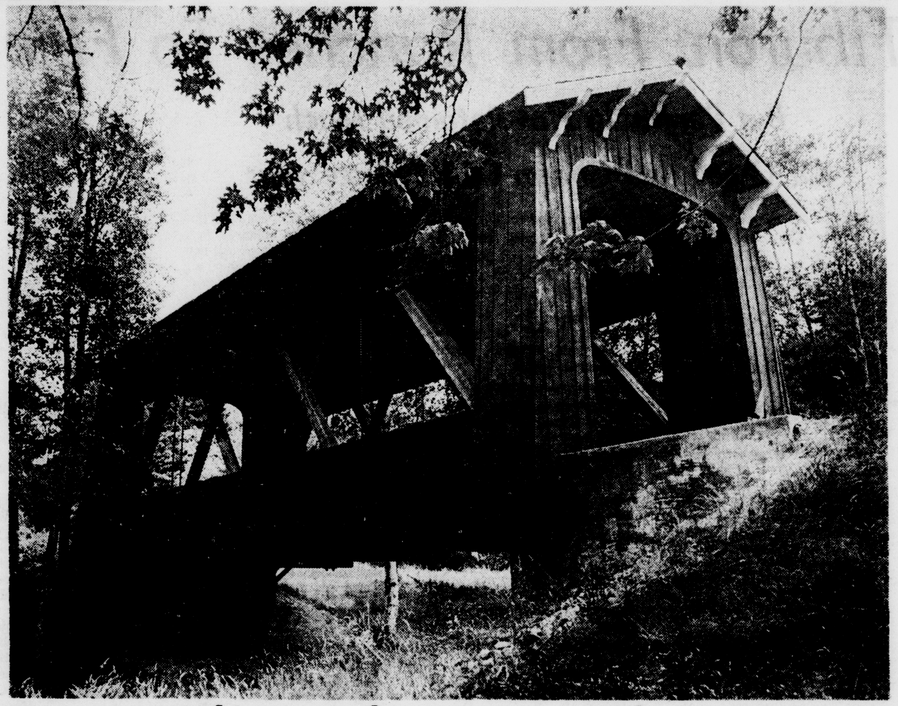
The Travel Pages



COVERED bridges are supposed to be a thing of the past, on their way to extinction. But the one pictured at right, located near Eureka in California's Redwood Empire, is only a few months old. And its builders expect it to be around for at least a century. Privately built, the redwood span has been turned over to Humboldt County and officially made a part of the public road system. Already, it is a major tourist attraction for visitors to the area. And it is without challenge the youngest of the country's some 700 surviving covered bridges. (California Redwood Association photo)

Why A Covered Bridge At This Time?

Why would anyone want to build a covered bridge — a wooden one at that — in the freeway age of souped-up cars and uptight drivers?

To the flock of summertime visitors who visit the nation's newest "kissing bridge" near Eureka, Calif., its two builders explain that the question answers itself.

"We felt that there should be some quiet places where people can reflect on the past and forget about progress," says local contractor Earl R. Biehn.

THE QUIET MAY be short-lived. Curious visitors to the barn-red span across Jacoby Creek already have made it one of the most popular tourist attractions in Humboldt County, according to the Redwood Empire Association. Camera-clicking sightseers sometimes number more than 100 a day, outdrawing the tallest tree in the world located in Redwood National Park 40 miles to the north.

Biehn's partner, James Roscoe of Arcata, offers several other good reasons for building the wooden anachronism.

"Anything but a covered bridge would have seemed out of place in these surroundings," he says, waving an arm toward the once-logged forest of tall redwood trees that blanket the nearby hills.

THERE ARE PLENTY of fanciful reasons given for roofing bridges throughout the country. Roscoe claims, "and most of them are phoney." The spans were not housed to keep snow off the roadway nor to prevent horses from skittering at the sight of water below. Providing a place for lovers and shaping up passing loads of hay are other mythical excuses.

"The truth is," Roscoe asserts, "a covered bridge is stronger, cheaper to maintain, and lasts longer than many other types. The housing protects the wooden trusses and stringers from moisture and sun."

"And because we built this one of redwood," he continues, "there's no reason why it shouldn't last forever." Most of California's 11 other covered bridges, including the 98-year-old Paradise Park Bridge near Santa Cruz, are also redwood structures.

ROSCOE IS A civil engineer who always wanted to build a box bridge. The dream became reality after he read a recent book titled "Covered Bridges of the West," which mentioned that the Oregon State Highway Department still had building-specifications for what it unromantically called "housed, through-type timber truss structures."

After acquiring a set of plans, Roscoe added modifications and produced his own 66-foot-long Howe truss bridge.

Biehn and Roscoe are developers of a surrounding subdivision named Brookwood, but their bridge was not a money-making idea. It cost $8,000 more than a conventional steel or masonry bridge, the builders admit, and has been dedicated to free public use.

"The Brookwood Bridge is just another way of expressing our life style up here in northern redwood country," Biehn concludes. "We know that the building of one covered bridge — or even replacing the thousand that once dotted the West — won't slow down the hell-bent pace of modern living, but we hope that it will serve as a permanent reminder of more peaceful days."

Switzerland's City Of Scents

A visitor's first impression of Zurich, Switzerland, is its aromatic scent.

The first conclusion is to suspect that the area is filled with competitive perfume shops spraying samples of their wares into the air. But soon your sweetened senses discover that the magnificent flower boxes that adorn almost every apartment house window are releasing this tantalizing aroma.

Another distinguishing characteristic of Zurich is that it is a divided city — not in spirit but geographically.

THE LIMMAT River flows through the city. This has made it necessary for about half the city to use the Zurich bridges daily. Also, it has provided ideal waterfront locations for its growing suburbs.

Homes are fanned along the slopes of the Uetliberg and Zurichberg and far down into the valley of the Limmat, over to the Glatt Valley. These are housing development, Swiss style.

In most towns in the United States the major thoroughfare is generally called "Main Street." In Zurich it is the Bahnhofstrasse — a charming, tree-lined street with a succession of trams making their way past groups of casual jaywalkers.

THE BAHNHOFSTRASSE is often referred to as the Fifth Avenue of Europe. Actually the similarity ends with the favorable comparison of shopping facilities. This Zurich "Main Street" has some of the finest shops on the Continent, and runs from the railroad station to the lake. The sales girls are models of patience and courtesy.

Among the special buildings of Zurich worth seeing is the Romanesque Grossmunster Cathedral, one of the oldest places of worship in Switzerland. It was built about 1100 in honor of three patron saints of the city, Felix, Regula and Exuperantius, and according to legend, by Charlemagne.

On the South Tower there is a statue of Charlemagne.

THE HISTORIC Guild Houses are popular landmarks of Zurich. Many date back to the early 16th Century. They built as meeting halls for the various craftsmen of the city. Today, preserved in their original forms with armorial bearings, antique furnishings, tall tile stoves, they serve as restaurants popular with gourmets.

Historically Zurich has been one of the chief cultural centers of Switzerland. Its reputation for the practice of the fine arts attracted many famous figures.

Thomas Mann, escaping from the ferment of German politics, fled to Zurich. James Joyce found the lakeside walks inspirational and wrote a sizable portion of "Ulysses" there. He died in Zurich in January, 1941. Richard Wagner composed his opera "Tristan und Isolde" in Zurich; and Thornton Wilder wrote his best seller "Our Town" in Zurich.

Throughout the year there is the constant hum of concerts, opera and theater in Zurich. Opera and ballet are performed by international artists at the Stadttheater; classical and modern dramas at Schauspielhaus; concerts at the Tonhalle and Kursaal.

AUTUMN IS a delightful time to visit Canada's maritime provinces, with the early fall foliage display a breathtaking experience. Above, a leisurely sightseeing trip in Halifax's picturesque Pleasant Park is a never-to-be forgotten experience for visitors to Nova Scotia. At left, Quebec Province too has its brilliant September foliage show, as this young couple discover at Gray Rocks Inn, an hour's drive from Montreal. (Canadian Government Travel Bureau photos)

CAJUN NOT THE SAME AS CREOLE

"Cajun" and "Creole" foods are not the same, according to the Louisiana Tourist Commission.

Creole cuisine had a more refined origin, having been started by aristocratic Europeans who often brought their chefs with them to the New World. Cajun cookery began with French Acadian refugees who often lived far away from sources of imported ingredients and who therefore had to "make do" with readily available seasonings, vegetables and meats. Acadians are more likely to cook everything together in one pot, such as jambalaya, whereas Creole dishes feature sauces and gravies, as well as respective courses, served separately.

Cajun foods are lustier, more heavily seasoned. Creole dishes are lighter, more delicately flavored.

Biography Of An Author Who Was The Victim Of Bad Timing

NATHANIEL WEST: THE ART OF HIS LIFE by Jay Martin; Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 419 pages, $10. Reviewed by Marji Parr.

Reviews Of New Reading

Nathaniel West had bad timing. He started his career as an author with the depression . . . release of his primer in angst, "Miss Lonelyhearts," was thwarted because of an economic trick . . . his anti-war play debuted just months after America was no longer anti-war . . . then, when he'd arrived as a money-making Hollywood writer, married to a woman who gloriously filled his needs, he failed to heed a stop sign.

Jay Martin, a young University of California (Irvine) professor, has traced the short unhappy life of one of the century's most promising writers, in a fascinating biography that interweaves his story against a consciousness of the times when West lived. The book's title is apparently a play on a previous biography by Martin: "Conrad Aiken; A Life of His Art."

The history starts with a pre-womb tour of West's background. His Jewishness is spelled out: The parents who struggled for triumph over poverty to educate the children. Achieve, achieve. His mother, Anna Wallenstein, was destined never to understand an artistic kind of success.

Nicknamed Pep because he lacked it, West had a personal incapacity for real involvements, turning this flaw into advantage in his fiction, in which he "tended both to elevate and to mock his first-person, fictive surrogate." He was, contrary to his friend and mentor, Scott Fitzgerald, on the side of intellect against the emotions, on the side of the brain against the heart. Pity and horror would be his themes; and his art, at its best, that of ironic tragedy.

W.H. Auden defined "West's disease" as a spiritual illness. During the depression, when many writers and economic analysts dramatized the sheer material misery, West measured the malady of the soul. It was a "disease of consciousness which renders it incapable of converting wishes into desires."

Nevertheless, he wrote and rewrote, tightened and condensed while he served his time as night clerk in his family's hotel. At an age when intellectuals favored Communism because it seemed more concerned with people than property (they would dearly pay for this youthful idealism two decades later), West had only a casual interest. He was too busy being a novelist.

Inevitably he went to Hollywood and worked for "Repulsive" Studios, a job he tossed off mechanically, without draining creative juices. He joined the other serious writers in Lotusland who turned their frustration toward gathering material for a book exposing the local grotesqueries. West's was of course "The Day of the Locust," his favorite work, and perhaps the best fiction ever written on Hollywood.

West affected fellow writers " as Bogart did actors, with his reserve and rock-like integrity." He drew strength from such colleagues as William Saroyan, Fitzgerald, Budd Schulberg, and Marin author Alvah Bessie, also a persecuted scenario jockey at that time.

The saddest time in West's 37 years was his first siege in Hollywood when, sick and broke, he was supported by his friend and brother-in-law, S.J. Perelman. Within a few years he pulled himself up screenland's slimy ladder to a financial respectability. But his experiences with love had to this point been painful, both emotionally and physically. Then he met Ruth McKenney's sister Eileen, portrayed on the stage four days after her death.

A sunny ingenue the real Eileen was not. But it developed that the qualities that had made her unhappy single would now make her a good wife. She had " great compassion and concern, a tenderness for other's egos, and sexual know-how." The enormity of her need resolved West's loneliness. And, in turn, she, as Budd Schulberg noted, "was an outgoing girl who refused to accept the Pep that we knew" and broke down his social reserve. West adored seeing her blossom; liked playing father to her small son.

Then, the last weekend before Christmas in 1940, the Wests set off for a hunting trek into Mexico.

On Friday they had been uncertain about whether to go. The weather was bad and there was shopping to do. But it was a good trip. They were returning Sunday with the legal limit of game in the car. West, as famous for his absurd driving as for his fine writing, daydreamed beyond a stop sign.

At the time of the fatal crash, Eileen's watch said 2:55, Dec. 22, 1940.

The Strategy And The Tactics Of A Political Comeback

THE RESURRECTION OF RICHARD NIXON by Jules Witcover; G. P. Putnam's Sons, 479 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Bob Raab.

In November, 1962, Richard Nixon was defeated in the California governorship race by incumbent Edmund G. Brown. The morning of his loss Nixon delivered a TV tirade against newsmen: "You won't have Richard Nixon to kick around anymore." He then stalked away, seemingly to political oblivion.

Newsman Jules Witcover begins here the saga of an astounding political rebirth. First off, according to Witcover, Nixon molded himself into the "new Nixon" by shedding himself to restraint in speech and action. Quietly, cautiously, he moved back into politics in 1963 by helping Republican fund-raising throughout the land. His appearances helped win many Congressional seats for Republicans in 1966 and earned the gratitude of hundreds of party leaders who were influential at local and state levels.

Nixon received the 1968 Republican nomination on the basis of delegate strength built during the mid-60s.

The 1964 split between Goldwater and liberal moderate Republicans tempted Nixon almost fatally to become a candidate. It was his one near slip during these years, but it was abscured by other events.

Nixon strategy for the 1968 Republican candidacy for President was to let George Romney defeat himself by talking ineffectually, and to isolate Nelson Rockefeller by pointing up the New Yorker's failure to support the party. It worked. Romney fell off, Rockefeller had little grass-roots support.

The campaign against Humphrey was one of caution — as befits a frontrunner. But the last-minute announcement by President Lyndon B. Johnson of Paris peace talks almost won the election for Humphrey.

These events are grist for Witcover's look behind the curtain.

The portrait of Nixon is not dramatically new. He is pictured as primarily devoted to advancing Richard Nixon's political fortunes. Tenacity, political astuteness and evasiveness are his characteristics.

The author's major charge against Nixon is dissembling during the 1968 campaigns. Witcover claims Nixon failed to inform the people about specifics re Vietnam, civil rights, economic policy and urban problems. Instead, Nixon "made an end run" around the press corps and its probing questions on these matters in order to speak bland generalities during carefully orchestrated local and regional television panel shows.

Grudgingly, Witcover admits that Nixon outwitted the press by giving the appearance of campaigning in person while actually utilizing television to win the election. Witcover concedes that newsmen covering presidential candidates, especially Republicans, tend to play too rough. He credits Romney's demise to heated statements made in response to constant aggravation by caustic newsmen.

"Resurrection" is worth the reading aside from any pain or pleasure we derive from one more recounting of the strength and weaknesses of Nixon. Witcover has documented the myriad parts of a political campaign. Strategy is central to successful campaigning and Witcover explains it and understands it as well as any writer we have read. He knows that strategy is using people effectively and the book is full of prominent names viewed behind the scenes being used and abused for the sake of strategy.

Gov. John Connally recently issued a heated denial to Witcover's contention that Connally made a deal with Nixon, later reneged, to deliver Texas in exchange for a cabinet position. (Texas went to Humphrey by a tiny margin.)

Witcover is dismayed by the direction presidential campaigns are turning. Television studios are a poor substitute, he writes, for auditoriums and stadiums . . . flesh-and-blood appearances. He doesn't make clear how a candidate 400 feet away on a podium delivering a canned speech is revealing more of himself than a candidate 10 feet away on a picture tube, also delivering a canned speech.

What Parents Should Know If Narcotic Problem Arises

WHAT YOU CAN DO ABOUT DRUGS AND YOUR CHILD by Herman Land; Hart, 240 pages, softcover, $2.45. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Here is a book with unfortunate but urgent contemporary application.

Land, a parent who admits to being a non-expert, but who has picked the brains and the writings of many experts, has written a book of concrete, practical advice for the parent concerned about the inroads drugs have made into the society in which their children must move.

Chapters on "How Drug Abusers Get Started" and "How to Spot the Use of Drugs" will, alone, answer many of the questions of worried parents.

Land differentiates between the various drugs, between "hard" users and experimenters, etc. He spells out the most effective verbal approach for the parent when the problem appears. And he discusses, too, both preventive and curative measures.

Dr. Henry Brill of the New York State Narcotics Control Commission in his foreword praises Land's work for its repeated emphasis "that where there seems to be a drug problem, the situation requires realistic attitudes. The situation can be made worse by panic . . ., by lack of understanding, by indecisiveness and by uncritical acceptance of prevalent notions . . . The material is factual, is valid, is succint, and is presented in laymen's language."

Sleuths & Suspense

ENQUIRY by Dick Francis; Harper & Row, 219 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Donald G. Davis.

Here is another standout suspense story by Dick Francis. His fans will not be disappointed.

Hughes is barred from the track. This means he is a nobody, disgraced and slapped down. And it means he must move because he lives at a stable. It also is worse than an insult because the whole business is a fraud. Hughes has been framed. He must prove it and prove it fast to save not only own face and livelihood but that of others.

So it is from this disaster that Hughes recovers in a painful and frustrating search for the truth. Francis' story takes on momentum, carefully plotted to suspenseful climax that finds Hughes seeing the light at the end of the tunnel — and in that light death staring him in the face.

YOUNG MAN, I THINK YOU'RE DYING, by Joan Fleming; G.P. Putnam's Sons, 192 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Rachel Farrara.

Joan Fleming can be depended upon to write unusual stories, unusually well. Her characters are consistently real, always interesting and often amusing.

Young Joe Bogey is a sympathetic character, even though he allows himself to be led around by a sly schemer, W. Sledge, a friend since they were schoolboys together. Joe has ambitions and realizes he can only succeed through hard work; he can't help but admire the easy money that Sledge always seems to have. Sledge implicates Joe from time to time, using Joe as chauffeur as he steals, and Joe enjoys the extra money he gains. He draws the line at murder, however, when Sledge loses his head one night and strangles a widow who surprises him in the midst of his robbery.

The ins and outs of this novel are intriguing. Joe's relationships with his parents and a young runaway, Frances Smith, are finely drawn and humorous, despite the grim predicament in which he finds himself.

The conclusion is swift and neatly done; the reader is sure it could not have ended any other way.

THE CHARLOTTE ARMSTRONG READER by Charlotte Armstrong; Coward-McCann, 501 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

The death of Charlotte Armstrong was a major loss to suspense novel fans, for she was among the two or three very best at contemporary tales of Gothic-tinged terror and menace.

In all she produced 26 such novels, a number of which rated among the finest of the genre.

Her fans can relive the excitement of three of those stories in this omnibus. Coward-McCann has put together, with preface by Alice Cromie, a collection that covers 20 years in her career.

The three novels are "The Unsuspected" (1945) that first earned her national attention and which was made into a first-rate suspense movie: "A Dram of Poison" (1956) that won her an Edgar and remains one of her most original and surprising novels, and "The Turret Room" (1965) that was perhaps her finest of more recent years.

Strong on atmosphere and character, clever with her plots, Miss Armstrong was unfailingly bewitching and entertaining. These three are all classics of their kind.

Bible For The Barbecuer And For The Camper-Outer

THE COMPLETE OUTDOOR COOKBOOK By Dan and Inez Morris; Hawthorn, 372 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Maxine Keown.

Here's a little "bible" for the barbecuer, a big book jammed with recipes and helpful information. It is a really impressive compendium, intended for both the backyard chef and the "camper-outer."

The recipes — there are several hundred of them — range from Many-Colored Cole Slaw to Sweet Potato Surprise, from Tomato Soup Spice Cake to Fish with Caraway Seeds, from Salmon and Flounder in Mushroom Soup to Standing Rib Roast on a Spit. Naturally, there's an abundance of steak, burger and chicken variations.

But perhaps outshining the recipes is the more general advice these two experienced outdoors people offer their readers — guidance in the selection of equipment and utensils, instructions on starting the fire (beware of fluids and jellies), the storage of food, etc.

There's a special chapter on cooking on boats, and another on foraging for food and water. And the book touches on such diverse subjects as nutrition and the loading of the car for the camping trip.

Armed with "The Complete Outdoor Cookbook" you might find yourself tackling such things as Whole, Unstuffed Chickens in Orange-Lemon Sauce the next time you fire up the barbecue.

ESP: Has It Been Proven? And A Manual Of Black Arts

By DON KEOWN

Research has established parapsychology beyond argument as an independent branch of science, in the opinion of Dr. Milan Ryzl, the Czech-born San Diego State College educator known for his ESP experimentations.

It is, he admits in his book, "Parapsychology: A Scientific Approach," still in its infancy, for the most part "a mere collection of strange observations."

But findings to date are sufficient to justify the acceptance of its existence, he believes, so that "today parapsychologists need not spend time offering new proofs of ESP."

Rather, scientists should concentrate upon determining the nature of extra-sensory perception and other psychic phenomena.

"This faculty (ESP) . . . exists," he declares, " and must be investigated."

Ryzl is eager that he and his colleagues press on with efforts to determine the makeup and the theories by which ESP functions. So far, he says, the surface barely has been scratched.

To date, he says, this pioneering work has given us a few clues. Clairvoyance, telepathy and precognition all seem to be different forms of the same ability, ESP. And ESP, in turn, seems to be related closely to psychokinesis, or the psycho phenomena of producing mechanical effects by purley mental effort.

The proof of psychokinesis, says Ryzl, is somewhat less apparent than the proof of extra-sensory perception. But it too, he argues, is supported by the evidence.

Indications are that ESP, "however imperfectly," is widespread among the human population and not restricted to an exceptional, gifted few, according to Dr. Ryzl. The extraverted, expansive, well-adjusted, free of neurotic traits seem to be the most responsive. But more important is the attainment of a specific, relaxed, rather dreamy state of mind.

The theory of telepathy remains a mystery, Ryzl admits, but adds: "We must admit that telepathy is a transmission of some signals carrying information . . . necessarily of an energetic nature . . . but entirely different from known forms of energy."

Ryzl analyzes several suggested theories, none of them very satisfactory.

"If we want to incorporate parapsychological phenomena into the scheme of other processes in the universe, we must be bold enough to depart radically from the established lines of reasoning," he maintains. "Such revolutionary phenomena as ESP and PK call for revolutionary theories of explanation."

And he adds: "Apparently we are heading toward the finding that our 'physical' universe is only a part of a more extensive reality whose other parts may be accessible to our observation through parapsychic phenomena — the finding that the system we use to describe events in our world is able to comprise only a part of this reality." In other words, he says, "a super universe" in which the old contradiction between "matter" and "spirit" evaporates.

PARAPSYCHOLOGY: A SCIENTIFIC APPROACH by Dr. Milan Ryzl; Hawthorn, 216 pages, $7.95.

MASTERING WITCHCRAFT by Paul Huson; Putnam's, 256 pages, $6.95.

But this, he admits, is only speculation, as are the future applications of parapsychology he foresees in medical diagnosis, police work and education.

Dr. Ryzl's detailed reports on research and experimentation with psychic phenomena make fascinating reading even if one does not feel the case for ESP and PK yet so clearly proven as he asserts it to be.

There is no doubting the doctor's credentials or the sincerity of his beliefs. And his argument is persuasive even if not overwhelmingly convincing. Certainly he has demonstrated a justification for proceeding with the more particularlized, more probing kind of research he feels to be in order. Mankind is presently squandering vast sums and great manpower upon endeavors that are not nearly so promising.

NOW, PAUL Huson, the young author of "Mastering Witchcraft," is something else.

Close study of his photograph on the back of the book's jacket shows no indication of his tongue being in cheek. But "A Practical Guide for Witches, Warlocks and Covens?" The guy just has to be kidding.

If so, it is a most elaborate and well executed put-on. With Tolkien-like thoroughness, Huson has woven from legend, lore and history a most amazing fabric. A whole nether-world for creatures of the occult.

With utmost seriousness, he outlines the techniques and the secrets of the practitioners of the black arts, complete with rituals, incantations, curses, runes, tools, costumes, recipes and other apparatus.

The reader discovers that the profession of witchery is a most demanding and most exacting one — and also, in many respects, a perilous one.

Of course, Huson couldn't really be serious about all this. Or could he?

Maybe we'd better take another look at that photograph. He did appear to be smiling just a bit. Or was that only the faraway look of a warlock considering some coven or pondering some magic?

"Mastering Witchcraft" makes intriguing reading, whether or not one is open to recruitment.

MARGARET FARRAR, former crossword puzzle editor of the New York Times, has put together volume No. 8 in her "The Pocket Book of Crossword Puzzles" series. The publisher: Pocket Books, naturally. MORRIE TURNER, a hit with Independent-Journal readers and a hit across the country with his "Wee Pals" comic strip, has another collection of his rib-ticklers reprinted in paperback by the New American Library. The Signet book recording the philosophizing and antics of Oliver, Randy, Sybil, et al is filled with gentle humor and no small amount of social significance.

CANCER must rank with dope, rioting and war as among the words that arouse the greatest dread in contemporary society. And none is fully understood, as to cause or consequence. Dr. Maurice Sutton tries to dispell some of the mystery surrounding cancer in his booklet "Cancer Explained" (Hart Publishing Co., 92 pages, softcover, $1.45). Its primary aim is to encourage early detection of the ailment, when it is most susceptible to cure. And, secondarily, to eliminate needless worry abut cancer which is more rampant than the disease. "Being on the lookout for cancer is very much a personal affair," says the doctor, and he tells you how to go about it.

THE LITERARY Guild's double selection for August is "Five Patients: The Hospital Explained" by Dr. Michael Crichton, and "Going All the Way," a novel by Dan Wakefield.

On The Stereo Scene—

Melanie—A Youthful Reincarnation Of The Immortal Lotte Lenya

By JOHN SUNIER

Melanie Safka is a beautifully wistful-looking, slightly chubby 23-year-old who lives in New York, is on a health food and astrology kick like lots of other young people today, writes and sings her own special little songs, and I think I'm in love with her.

It's her voice — an amazing reincarnation of the youthful Lotte Lenya of "Three-Penny Opera" fame.

Melanie (she prefers to use only her first name) communicates the tenderness, understanding yet world-weariness of a woman who has Been-Through-It-All. (At 23?)

Her three albums to date are all on the Buddah Records label (Born to Be — BDS 5024, Melanie — BDS 5041, Candles in the Rain — BD 5060)

I'd suggest the middle one for a starter. It features the really great "Beautiful People," as well as the touching "Tuning My Guitar," and the invitation any red-blooded guy would jump to act upon, "Take me Home With You." The first LP contains her first hit, "I'm Back in Town," plus the zany "Animal Crackers" which certainly can't be part of Melanie's natural foods diet.

The big plug number on the third album is a joint venture with the Edwin Hawkins Singers, "Lay Down." It doesn't quite come off and Melanie is straining to be heard above the choir. Better are "Alexander Beetle" (words by A.A. Milne) and Melanie's unique version of "Carolina on My Mind." The arrangements for all the tunes are uniformly tasteful and supportive of Melanie's voice.

"Play this album real loud" is the instruction of the Flamin Groovies, another San Francisco rock group, in their second LP (Kama Sutra KSBS 2021). The Groovies specialize in their own re-creation of 1950's rock'n' roll. It's simple, gutsy, direct and damn the torpedoes.

MELANIE SAFKA
She prefers the first name

"She's Falling Apart" is a satire on the Beatles' "She's Leaving Home."

"WOODSTOCK" is a terrific film experience, even if it is overpriced.

The three-record soundtrack set (Cotillion SD3-500) will preserve the memory of the film for many, but better versions of most of the tunes are available elsewhere. The reproduction is not up to studio standards by any means, and some of the performances fall flat too, especially those of the then-inexperienced Crosby, Stills, Young & Nash.

High points of the album for this writer were Joan Baez's "Joe Hill," Country Joe and The Fish's "Fish Cheer," Joe Cocker's "With a Little Help from My Friends," and Jimi Hendrix' amazing "Star Spangled Banner."

There is too much Sly & the Family Stone, good as the group was, and how Ten Years After got into the film at all I'll never know. They are the lowest of flashy, pandering imitation and exaggeration.

The packaging of the three-fold album is worthy of mention for its excellent design.

I'VE ONLY JUST received the last two Beatles albums and Paul's effort, so my apologies for a late assessment. Just in case somebody out there hasn't picked up on all three, they're winners of course.

The "Hey Jude" LP (Apple SW-385) brings Beatles fans good stereo versions of "Paperback Writer," "Lady Madonna" and "Ballad of John and Yoko," as well as the title hit. I was surprised at the several tunes from the first Beatles film "Hard Day's Night."

I guess that soundtrack was on United Artists and this was Apple's chance to get in there too.

"Let It Be" didn't sound like the greatest experience in cinema, so I missed it, but the soundtrack, cleaned up and rebalanced by Phil Spector, is most enjoyable.

"I Dig a Pony," "I Me Mine," "Get Back," "The Long and Winding Road," and the title tune are already gems in the Beatles catalog of tunes. The informality and excitement of the live recording situation comes through well and provides a welcome change from the highly-produced Beatles numbers of late. (Apple AR 34001).

"McCARTNEY" (Apple STAO 3363) is the title of Paul's solo flight. It maintains a very high standard and is full of the gorgeous melodic gift that McCartney has. Naming favorites is almost impossible: "That Would be Something," "Man We Was Lonely," "Oo You," "Maybe I'm Amazed" . . . the list could easily include all 14 tracks.

The liner says all instruments and voices are by Paul, and with the full sound on many tracks, that really is something!

Tremendous with stereo headsets for those on a head trip.

SOME NEW BOOKS FOR THE JUNIORS

The Art For Children Series of books from Doubleday and Co. represents a diferent approach to presenting and interpreting the work of the masters for juniors, and it promises to be most effective.

Ernest Raboff, critic, dealer and himself an artist, is doing the series, and has succeeded remarkably well in making his text informative and incisive while avoiding the highblown and pedantic that might very well "turn off" the youngsters.

The reproduced artwork is beautifully depicted in color and skilfully chosen for its child-appeal.

The texts are related in a special handprinting that makes for easy reading and which also should be particularly pleasing to young eyes.

The first three books in the series to reach this desk: Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec," "Pierre-Auguste Renoir" and "Henri Rousseau," each priced at $3.95, each splendidly done, each capturing nicely the special attributes of the painter discussed and making those qualities meaningful to the young viewer.

Some other new books for the juniors:

"My Kangaroo Phoebe" (Hill & Wang, $3,95) by Hans Limmer, originally in German, is distinguished by the appealing photographs of Lies Wiegman. It is a simple story of one lad's friendship with a baby kangaroo at the town zoo that includes a visit to school and some anxious minutes when little Phoebe is missing for a time. Needless to say, Phoebe is wonderfully photogenic, and boys and girls should find the book, part of a new Terra Magica Series, irresistible.

Halloween isn't too far off now, making "Ghosts and Spirits of Many Lands" (Doubleday, $4.50) edited by Freya Littledale a timely collection. It is an anthology of spooky stories that have delighted and frightened the youngsters of countries as unlike as England and the Congo, China and the Argentine. The pages are filled with goblins and demons with a talking skull thrown in. Appropriately dark wood engravings by Stefan Martin contribute to the shivers.

"The Uproar" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95) by Doris Orgel, with soft, delicate artwork by Anita Lobel, is a fantasy excursion for the youngster, telling about how a child's misinterpretation of one adult word can set off a whole chain of imaginative events. It is an attractive and meaningful book to adult eyes. But one wonders if the child might not find the story a mite confusing.

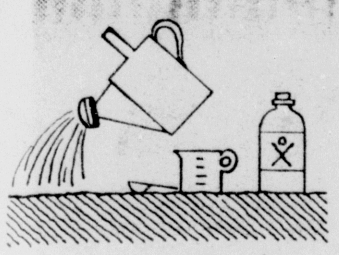
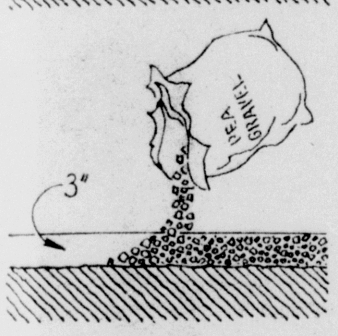
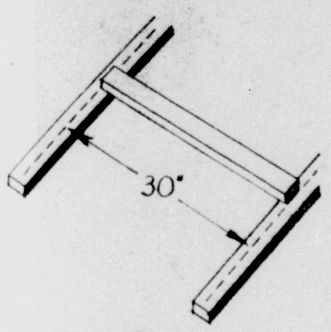
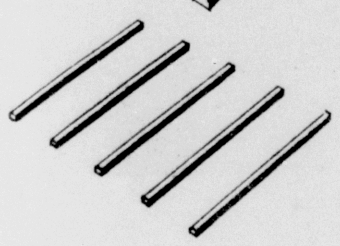
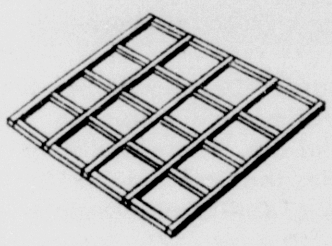
A Parquet Pattern For The Patio

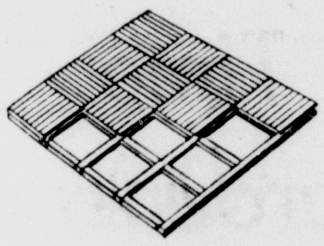


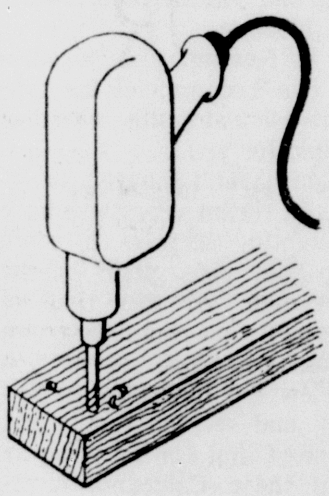












Here's How To Construct A Floor From Redwood

To construct a 10-by-10-foot redwood parquet patio floor:

1. Preparation of the ground is necessary if the patio is not already paved with a layer of concrete or similar material. If the area to be paved with redwood decking is soil, all vegetation should be removed and a chemical soil sterilant applied to prevent regrowth.

2. On a non-paved area, a three inch depth of sand or pea gravel will prove beneficial for drainage and will help inhibit weed growth. However, a flat, tamped soil surface that drains well can prove satisfactory as a base for laying a built-up redwood floor.

3. Although the foundation of the deck will not be visible (except for the perimeter edges) after the parquet decking is laid, the foundation grid must be constructed with precision. It must be carefully measured so that the 30 inch two-by-four decking will rest on two-by-four rails placed with 30 inch centers. An exception to this measurement is the perimeter of the grid where the 30-inch decking must extend beyond the center to be flush with the outside edges of the two-by-four rail foundation. This variation is achieved by marking, sawing, and placing the short, connecting rails in accordance with the deck plan dimensions shown.

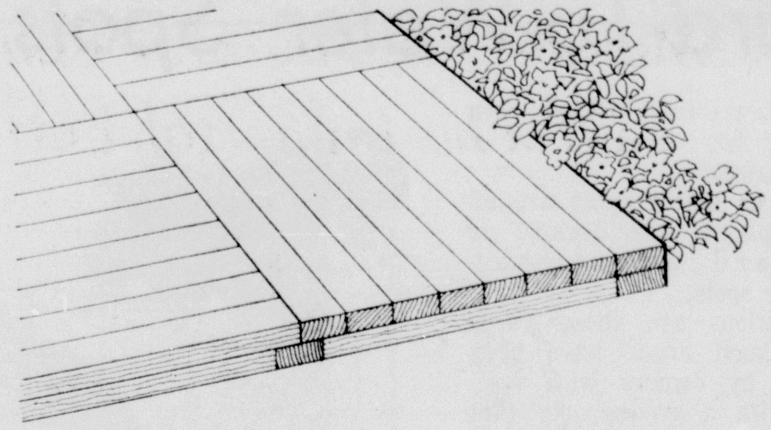
4. Use at least construction heart grade redwood to form the 10 foot square foundation grid. Lay five 10-foot rails parallel on the ground with intervals of 26⅜ inches between the three middle rails, and intervals of 24-9/16 inches between these and the perimeter rails. Saw ten 26⅜-inch rails, and ten 24 9/16-inch rails and insert them between the 10 foot rails at the above described spacing intervals to form a grid. Use a carpenter's square to prove that all corners are at right angles and toenail the rails together using size 8d nails* .

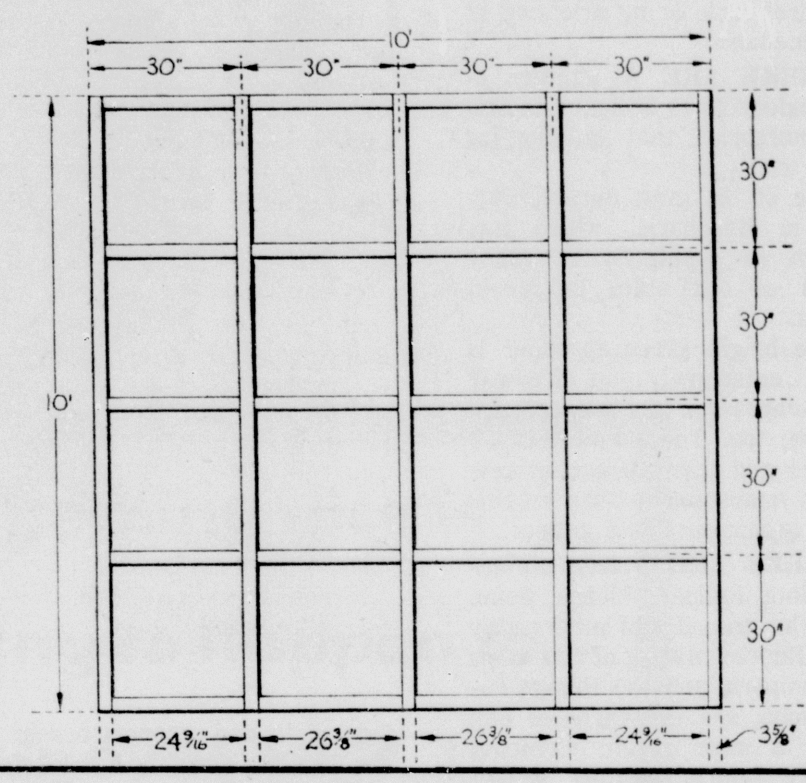
5. Now lay the decking using 128 clear all heart redwood two-by-fours, each 30 inches long. Lay out the entire floor area. Each of the 11 squares of the grid should be covered with eight parallel two-by-fours spaced approximately one-eighth of an inch apart (about the thickness of a 16d nail) to allow for drainage. The parquet pattern is achieved by laying the decking pieces of each 30-inch square at right angles to the adjacent square.

6. To avoid cracking or splitting of the ends of the decking material when nailing, it is advisable to predrill two nail holes at each end of each piece. Then nail the decking to the foundation using size 16d non-corroding nails.

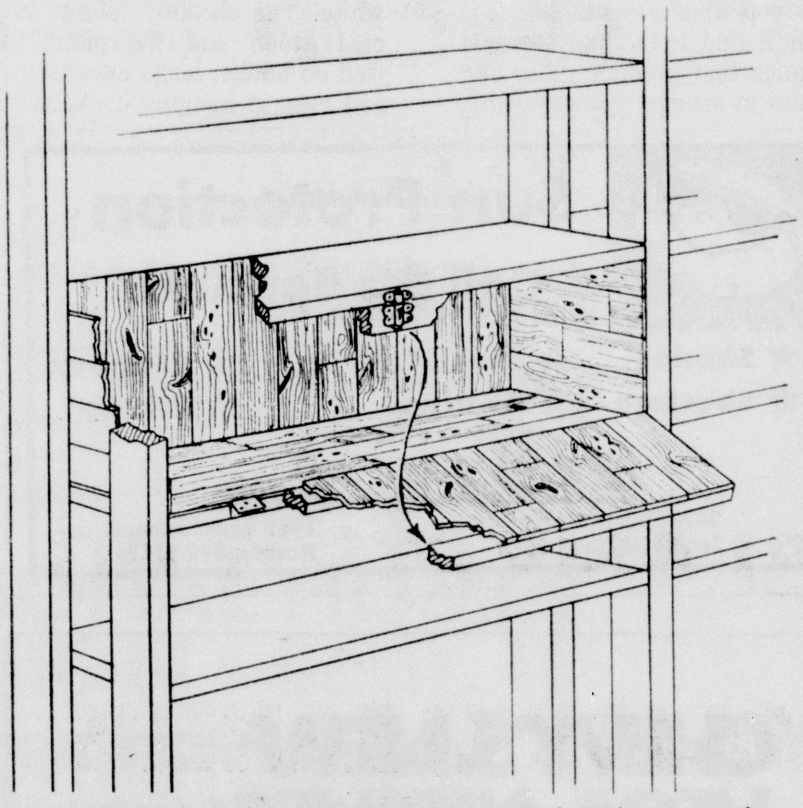
* To prevent staining of redwood by nails, use only non-corroding nails: stainless steel, aluminum, or high quality, hot-dipped galvanized.

For information on exterior redwood finishes, write to Dept. DB, California Redwood Association, 617 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Calif., 94111.





Handyman's Page



A BASEMENT, utility room or garage cedar closet can be built at low, low cost by enclosing existing shelves with aromatic red cedar wood. This usually open shelving consists of lumber or plywood pieces supported by wood or metal legs. Such a common, home-made storage system lends itself to a cedar-lined enclosure. As shown in the accompanying illustration, the home craftsman can easily use the narrow red cedar boards, which are tongue and grooved on their edges and ends, to make a six sided enclosure. The boards simply are nailed to the wood supports, as shown, or in some cases directly to the shelf edges and ends. In addition, the underside of the upper shelf and the surface of the lower shelf should be covered, too. The idea is to get the strongest possible aroma of cedar, which moths and their larvae detest. A cedar-lined door, hinged at the bottom, can be made by nailing the joined cedar boards to one-by-two-inch lumber along their edges. To make tight corners where the cedar boards meet, miter the outer edges of the corner boards. A few dollars spent on a simple project like this can provide the homemaker an ideal place for storing youngsters' galoshes, sports gear, scarves, sweaters and the like. Clothing put here won't be crowding closets in the bedrooms.

There's Nothing Like Bookshelf Beside Your Favorite Armchair

When you settle into your favorite reading corner, what better aid than your own chairside bookshelves, big enough to hold both current reading and old favorites, yet small enough to be moved from room to room?

The pattern is simple.

Upright boards 10 inches wide at each end and two rows of right-angled V-type shelves between. It can be scaled to fit beside your chair.

Twenty-four inches is a handy module for both height and length, with end pieces 10 inches wide and V-shelves either right-angled one by sixes or a one by eight for the back and one by six for the "seat," right-angled again, of course, to cradle books.

The shelving should be firmly nailed to hold the weight, and nails countersunk. Nail holes should be filled after the wood is stained.

Hollowed out quarter-round makes good handles, but hinged or fixed hardware may be used.

Some may prefer to adapt the lower shelf to accommodate magazines and newspapers.

Any western wood is well suited to this type of project. Decorative cutouts in the end pieces between the shelves may be added.

Don't Throw Away Old Card Table

Don't throw away an old card table because of a worn top.

Just cover it with a panel of Royalcote Marbletone, a thin hardboard with the appearance of travertine marble. It can be found at most lumber yards.

Lightly bevel the edges with a file and attach with all-purpose adhesive. Then, apply a clear, waterproof varnish to protect the surface against spillage.

For Hard-To-Reach, Hard-To-Water Spots

This is the time of year when summer has taken its toll of Marin lawns.

Bare or brown spots are all too apparent, particularly in those h a r d -t o -r e a c h, hard-to-water spots.

Exceptions are those yards where such areas have been planted by owners with foresight with a groundcover that requires little or no attention or maintenance.

THERE ARE A number of groundcovers to be found in Marin nurseries that qualify for such use.

One of the most durable covers is Baccharis, which has grown in popularity in many parts of our state in recent years.

The bright green spreader is used extensively on freeway landscapes and is a good garden choice, too. The t o o t h -l i k e leaves and many branches create a handsome texture on this deep green, prostrate grower.

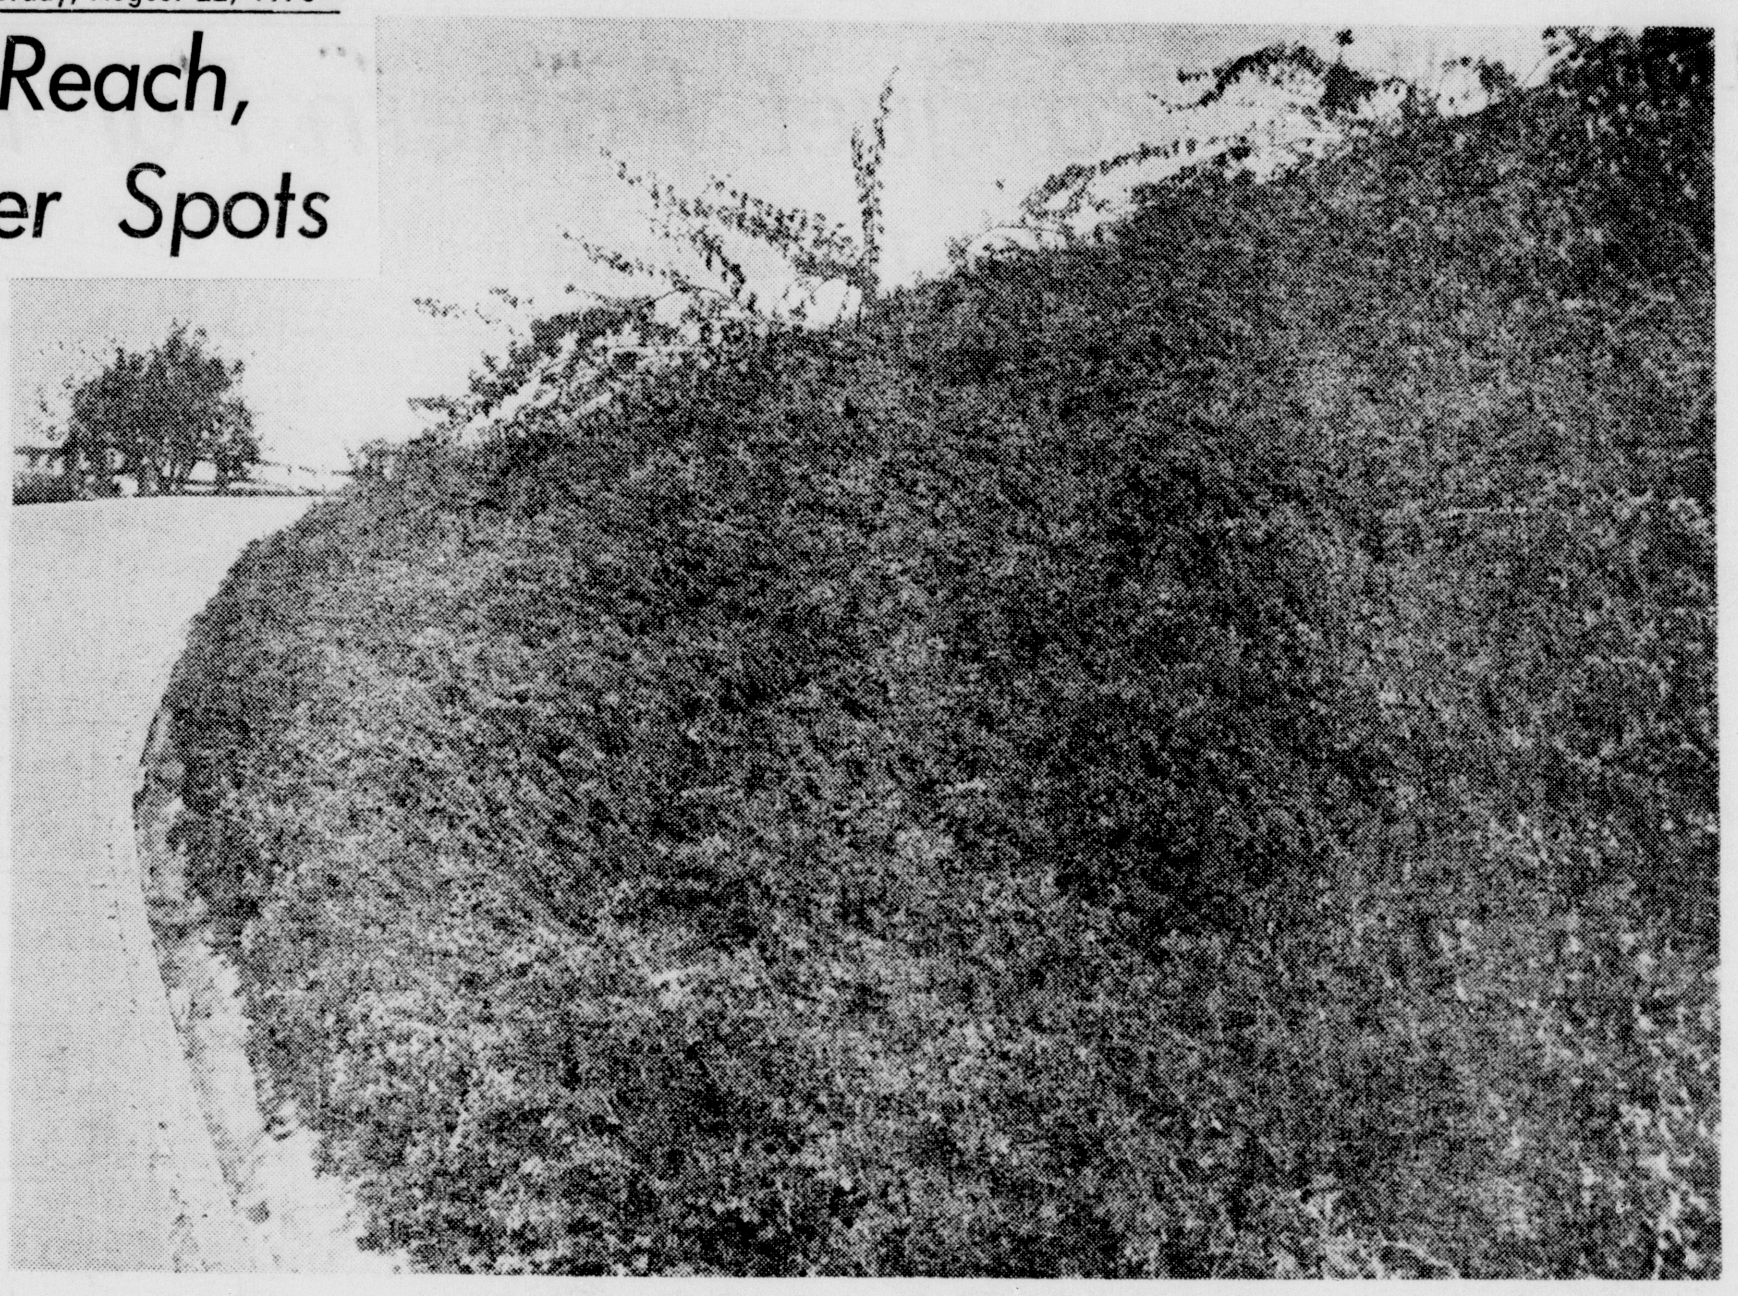
THERE ARE A host of outstanding Junipers to use. Some hug the ground and others stay low. Representative of this class of Junipers, and the foliage colorations, are the varieties San Jose, a sage green; Compact Pfitzer Juniper, a dark green; Wilton's Carpet, silver b l u e; and Silver Spreader, a juniper with silver-green foliage.

Blooming groundcovers f o r difficult spots? There are several, and your nurseryman can show you what's available.

You'll find individual Gazania varieties that produce daisy-like flowers in orange, yellow, white, red, pink and coppery-orange. The Trailing Gazania has lovely gray foliage and a profusion of yellow blooms.

TRAILING AFRICAN Daisy is another flowering choice.

The two-inch size b l o o m s change from lilac hue to an off white. The shrubby foliage is a cool green and the plants do well on banks, large expanses — and even in hanging baskets.



TRAILING ROSEMARY is an excellent selection as a groundcover for the far reaches of the garden or yard that are difficult to water. It boasts a lovely sage green foliage and is covered with small blue flowers through much of the warm season. Despite its beauty, it is rugged and will survive when many other plantings wilt and die. There are other groundcover possibilities that are e q u a l l y hardy. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

Now Is Hibiscus-Planting Time For Beauty-Conscious Gardener

In all except the coldest areas of Marin County, you can plant Hibiscus now and assure yourself some spectacular blooms in the future.

This evergreen plant is one of the showiest flowering shrubs to be seen in California. There are a couple dozen varieties, in luscious colors and differing flower forms that adorn the plants throughout the summer months.

G R O W T H HABIT may be dense and dwarfish or loose and open. The different glossy foliage t e x t u r e s and varying growth habits are used effectively by landscape designers to achieve distinctive effects in today's gardens.

With architectural emphasis being placed on interior and exterior colors in today's homes, the Hibiscus is often relied upon to provide and perpetuate color harmony in the garden. They accomplish this admirably — the flowers range in color from white through pink to red, from yellow and apricot to orange.

The plants can be used as a flowering screen for privacy, and are ideal as shrubs in the foundation planting near the house — or in raised beds.

HIBISCUS IS a good plant for growing in tubs; certain varieties are also available in tree form.

H i b i s c u s plants like good drainage. This can be provided by any of several ready-to-use organic preparations your nurseryman can recommend. Give Hibiscus liberal amounts of water — don't let the roots stand in water, though.

The plants need sun, heat, and protection from frost. In cool coastal gardens it's necessary to plant against a warm southern wall where heat is trapped — in both summer and winter.

TO KEEP MATURE plants growing vigorously, prune out about one-third of the old wood in early spring — after the danger of frost has passed. Pinching-out tip growth of stems in spring and summer will produce more blooms.

As to feeding, your nurseryman can recommend the type food to use and outline a feeding schedule for you.

If you haven't shopped for Hibiscus in recent years, you have a delightful surprise in store when you visit your nearby nurserymen. At this time of year you'll find container-grown specimens in bloom so that you can view the flower forms and colors, and see the beauty and enjoyment that can be yours by having these California favorites in your garden.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

The Marin gardeners' checklist for the coming week:

✔ While deep and regular watering is essential to a healthy lawn this time of the year, be sure you do that watering in the morning. Watering in the late afternoon or evening invites fungus. Which may be the reason for those brown spots showing up in the lawn.

✔ And if your lawn hasn't had a summer feeding, apply a fertilizer now. Your nurseryman can specify the proper lawn food for the type of turf you have.

✔ Dahlias should be watered regularly and deeply. Make certain tall plants are staked. Otherwise, they will topple under the weight of their blooms.

✔ Even though we are deep into summer, it is still wise to bait for snails. Persistence pays off in the war against these pests.

✔ Give your roses a feeding to encourage an abundant autumn bloom.

✔ Plant groundcovers now. Fall and winter rains will help them get established, so that they will fill in more quickly next spring.

Lights At Night Show Off Trees

"I think that I shall never see A poem lovely as a tree . . ."

When Joyce Kilmer wrote his poem he doubtless was expressing his impressions of a tree as seen in the daytime.

More and more, however, people today are appreciating the beauty of trees after sunset. This is made possible by the imaginative use of electric lights.

SUCH LIGHTING not only can show off the beauty of an already beautiful tree, but also it can be used to bring out the best points and conceal the poor ones of a just-ordinary-looking tree.

For the average homeowner an effective lighting job requires only two or three 150-watt PAR-38 spot and flood lamps, These are made of hard glass, and resist breakage due to rain. The bulbs should be installed in a fixture which directs the light where you want it and hides the bulb from direct view.

You can light the tree as a focal point in your yard, as a background for flowers and shrubbery, or as a canopy over your garden or terrace. The type of tree, its size and location, and the effect you desire, will help determine the lighting plan.

TO MAKE THE tree the center of attraction you should light it from two or three directions, with more light from one side than the other. This develops the tree's three-dimensional character.

A subtle lighting effect can be achieved by directing the light vertically from the tree's base, so that it grazes the trunk and passes through the branches and leaves. Trees with open branching also can be lighted from within, as from the tree's crotch.

CONCEALED lighting can make a specimen tree even more beautiful at night than it is in the daylight.

Sometimes it is desirable to show the tree in silhouette. This can be accomplished by lighting its background — wall, fence, or shrubbery — with just a little light on the tree itself to define it.

Fascinating effects can be achieved by mounting the light source high in a tree and aiming it downward so the light filters through the leaves and branches. The result — simulated moonlight.

YOU'LL FIND that the tree has a flat appearance if lighted from the direction from which you usually view it. Angle the light toward the tree.

But you'll get the most satisfaction out of your tree-lighting project by using your imagination, and experimenting until you get the results you want.

Want to learn more about tree and garden lighting? Write for "Light Makes a Difference . . . Outdoors." Single copies are available free from the Inquiry Bureau, Department 230-5525, General Electric Co., Nela Park Cleveland, Ohio, 44112.

Course In Flower Drying Enlivens Home In Winter

Your flower garden can give you double beauty if you dry some of the blooms.

Dried flowers, arranged into a beautiful bouquet, can add color and charm to your home through the winter.

In colonial days the art of drying flowers was popular. Now, there has been a revival of this interest by many homemakers and garden club members.

STARTING TO select and dry materials early in the season is important if you want a variety of forms and colors to choose from when fall comes.

If you are interested in drying flowers, you'll be interested as well in a correspondence course offered by Pennsylvania State University.

You'll be instructed on which flowers to choose for drying, at what stage of maturity to pick each them and the best preserving materials to use.

As you select and preserve materials, remember that line, form, pattern, texture, and a pleasing color scheme are just as essential as for arrangements made with fresh plant material.

OTHER LESSONS in the course discuss design, containers, color and corsage- making. You'll learn which garden flowers to use, how to wire them and how to make bows for your corsages.

If you're interested, send $3 to Flower Arrangement, 202 Agricultural Education Building, University Park, Pa., 16802 Check or money order should be made payable to Pennsylvania State University.

When children discover a playmate wets the bed—the result can be merciless teasing. And serious psychological problems.

Even the entire family can be affected. The cost and work of taking care of a bed-wetting child can cause friction and irritability among parents. Walter C. Alvarez, M.D., Prof. Emeritus, Mayo Clinic, says: "Bedwetting . . . is hard on the unhappy child and on the mother . . . even if his parents do not scold him, he cannot help feeling that he is a terrible nuisance and a disgrace to the family."

But now bedwetting, when not caused by organic defect or disease, can be ended. Safely. Permanently.

Pacific International has ended bedwetting for tens of thousands of children and adults from ages 4 to 57 in the past two decades.

Doris Day Lives The Healthy Life

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) —Doris Day may be the healthiest star of a weekly television series, no small thanks to her dedication to health foods and a plentitude of exercise.

The freckled star of "The Doris Day Show" arises before 7 a.m. each day, exercises lightly in her bedroom and then swims vigorously in her extra-large swimming pool.

After a shower Doris has a hearty breakfast and is off to the studio for a day's work, which frequently doesn't end until after sundown.

It is not unusual for Doris to have a short nap in her dressing room after a lunch of fruit or salad.

A WIDOW — her husband, producer Martin Melcher, died more than two years ago — Doris' name does not appear in the gossip columns.

Shattered by the death of her husband, Doris retreated to her desert home in Palm Springs to reassemble her life. She is a devout Christian Scientist and drew strength from her religion.

She and Melcher once enjoyed the weekends at their Malibu Beach home, but Doris no longer spends much time there. On warm days she drives to the beach for long walks along the sand.

ON DAYS WHEN she's not working, or during vacations, Doris likes nothing better than riding her bicycle around the neighborhood.

With freckles abloom, a straw hat, slacks and blouse, Doris is rarely recognized by tourists or residents. She enjoys riding into the heart of the Beverly Hills shopping district to have a cup of tea and cookies at a favorite shop.

Her companions at home are six dogs. There is a collie named Daisy June, a mixed schnauzer and poodle who answers to Bubbles, and a frolicking foursome of poodles: Tiger, Muffy, Bobo and Charlie.

DORIS IS AN avid sports fan who can be found in the stands cheering for the basketball Lakers and baseball's Dodgers.

When the mood seized her — which is not infrequently — Doris redecorates her large, comfortable house. She is addicted to happy, bright colors, especially yellow and orange. Her furniture is comfortable and contemporary.

She likes to slip on a pair of gloves and putter about the yard, although she has a gardener. Additionally, she enjoys cooking, despite the fact she has full-time domestic help.

NEIGHBORS ARE sometimes surprised when Doris, now in her 40s, stops on her bicycle to admire their gardens.

The blonde star of the CBS series is the mother of a son, Terry, now in his 20s, who is an executive with a recording company.

The two are close and it was Terry to whom Doris turned for counsel when Melcher died.

THIS SEASON the format of her show will be changed somewhat to make Doris more metropolitan, a switch from the country setting of the series in its first year.

Doris is pleased with the change and the high ratings.

'Hall Of Fame' Likes The Bard

The Hallmark Hall of Fame has brought more complete Shakespearean productions to television than any other dramatic series.

It has offered television versions of "Hamlet," "King Richard II," two productions of "Macbeth," "The Taming of the Shrew" and its musical adaptation "Kiss Me Kate," "Twelfth Night" and "The Tempest."

The Bard will visit The Hall of Fame again this fall when it celebrates its 20th consecutive year on television with a new production of "Hamlet" starring Richard Chamberlain on NBC-TV.

Marin Poets' Corner

TO A BLONDE GIRL

Sleep, now with dark eyes,
That only the light of day can open —
'Till the cool light of morning,
And the energy of a new day comes through
Your windows, and is Diffused into a million different rainbow colors,
Shining inside your room,
Pulling you, like a magnet, into the Brilliant reality of nothing.

LARKSPUR — BRUCE W. SHORT

THE PROMOTER

See his eyes!
How large and fierce,
As if to pierce
The soul with its magnetic spell.
He acts and speaks so well
And quite convincingly,
That none dare to suspect
That he may be,
The landlord of hell.

FAIRFAX — DOROTHY LYNN
